How To Stop the War

By ARTHUR BRISBANE

HAVE YOU any money, put away waiting for "something to turn up." If so, put it to work. Buy something, good securities, real estate, an automobile, anything you need. Or at least put it in a bank where it can be used to finance new enterprise and give employment.

Those that wait, while opportunity passes, can buy "United States baby bonds."

Secretary Mills, new, young and able secretary of the treasury, appointed by President Hoover in place of Secretary Mellon, will sell government bonds in small denominations that will pay two per cent and be worth par always, because they come due at the end of a year, and can be redeemed at any time on 60 days' notice.

RUSSIA COMPLAINS that Japan is moving troops uncomfortably close to Russia's border. Many of these troops are said to be "White" Russian fighters, bitterly hated by Stalin.

Russia doesn't want trouble, she wants peace to finish her series of five-year plans .

But if Japan should irritate Russia, she would have on her hands a problem that would make her forget "poor China."

She would meet a Russia different from the soft, corrupt Russia of the Czars, easily beaten by Japan not long ago.

Before mixing in a fight with Russia it would be well for the intelligent Japanese to read again the history of the French revolution and revolutionary armies that walked all over Europe and made kings look ridiculous.

There is great power in the spirit of revolution much as we deplore its existence.

Russia possesses now the greatest army in the world, many airplanes, many well trained pilots, and, roused to anger, might make the Mikado feel about Russia as young Bonaparte made the Austrian emperor feel about France.

THREE HUNDRED husbands of Bayonne, N. J., asked County Prosecutor Drewer to keep their wives out of gambling houses. In a raid 290 players out of 300 were women. The wives promised to gamble no more, but some won't be able to keep the promise.

Drugs, gambling and alcohol establish a much firmer hold on women than on men, because of woman's greater refinement and nervous sensibility as compared with man.

Also a woman gambling or drinking is a sadder sight than a man thus engaged. To see a rose in the gutter is more unpleasant than seeing a turnip there.

By the way, you can see many a "rose in the gutter" by visiting any of New York City's forty or fifty thousand speakeasies, where at bars, especially arranged, women may be seen drinking all kinds of poisonous bootleg concoctions.

Work To Start Tuesday on Building on Olney Avenue.

50 WILL GET WORK

Expect Plant To Be Ready for Occupancy by July.

The Moores & Ross Milk Co. will build a new, modern, one-story plant near its present plant on Olney avenue, it was announced today by L. C. Dickson, manager.

Construction will be started Tuesday morning by E. Elford & Co. of Columbus, general contractors and builders of the Harding memorial.

At least 50 men will be given part-time work throughout the construction period, Mr. Dickson said. Only Marion men will be employed, and all materials will be purchased from local builders' supply dealers, through arrangements made with the contractors. Work ordinarily done by one shift of men will be divided between two shifts to give more men employment.

To Be Ready in July

Occupancy of the building is scheduled for some time in July. The present plant will be converted into a garage and storage at that time.

The new plant will be housed in a brick building which will be approximately 60 by 150 feet in dimensions. It will cover two lots immediately north of the Ohio National Guard armory, and will face Olney avenue. Two residences separate it from the present plant.

Both the building and equipment will be entirely new and modern, Mr. Dickson said. Floors and walls will be of tile. Equipment for pasteurizing milk, and making butter, ice cream and cheese will be housed in the new plant. The building will set back 15 feet from the street to allow room for a lawn in front. With the exception of this 15-foot strip and eight-foot drives on the north and south sides, the building will cover the entire two lots.

The plant will serve Moores & Ross retailers in Marion and communities in this and surrounding counties. The company has distributors in Galion, Delaware, Richwood, Kenton, Upper Sandusky, Bucyrus, Willard and virtually all small communities in the same district, including Prospect, Waldo, Martel, Green Camp, Morral and LaRue in this county.

Will Employ 25

Approximately 25 persons will be employed in the operation of the plant, which will handle the milk of 70 producers in Marion and nearby counties. The construction of the building will be such that a second story can be added easily to meet future expansion.

The plant will be one of 10 wholesale and retail plants of the Moore & Ross Milk Co. in this state. L. C. Dickson has been the company's local manager for six years. He resides at 226 Homer street.

The Moores & Ross Milk Co. eight years ago took over the Montel Ice Cream Co. here as the basis for its present plant which had been in operation two years.

The general contractors for the new building not only built the Harding memorial but also constructed the Ohio Associated Telephone Co. building, the Elks building, Marion Ice & Coal Storage Co. building, the Miller market building, and rebuilt the Marion National bank building.

BLAST IN MINE TRAPS 30 MEN

RESCUERS BEGIN WORK

Driven Back by Heavy Air on Entering Without Gas Masks.

By The Associated Press

BLUEFIELD, W. Va., Feb. 27—Thirty miners were trapped today by an explosion in the Boissevain mine of the Pocahontas Fuel company near Pocahontas, Va., 25 miles from Bluefield.

Fear for the safety of the entombed men was expressed when they failed to reach the surface several hours after the ending of the night shift when they should have left the mine.

The explosion occurred about 4:30 a. m. The night shift ends at 7 a. m.

Reports Explosion

One miner coming to the surface said he heard "some kind of an explosion" in another section than that in which he was working, and started out immediately.

Rescue crews from Jenkin-Jones, W. Va., and Pocahontas, Va., equipped with gas masks, began exploring the workings in an effort to determine the fate of the trapped men.

The cause of the blast or its extent was undetermined. Company officials said the mine was nongaseous and that the blast might have been caused by powder.

Rescuers Driven Back

Rescue workers were driven back by heavy air when they first attempted to enter without gas masks.

Thomas Stockdale, a state mine inspector, reported that air conditions were "bad" and that it would be necessary to reverse the fans to force fresh air into the workings.

Company officials said several miners escaped through the main entry after the explosion.

News of Peace Move Comes with Chinese Holding Against Attacks.

By The Associated Press

LONDON, Feb. 27—A Reuters News Agency dispatch from Geneva this evening said strong rumors were current there that an immediate truce was in prospect at Shanghai.

Japan has addressed an important communication to the League of Nations council, the dispatch said, and this may make possible an immediate end to the hostilities.

SHANGHAI, Feb. 27—Despite Japanese claims that they had captured the western end of Kiangwan village, the stubborn Chinese garrison in that beleaguered town was still holding on at 11 o'clock tonight.

The Associated Press correspondent saw Chinese stretcher-bearers carrying wounded out of the village. It was testimony enough that the town was not yet surrounded although the Japanese had said they had thrown a line around it and occupied the western section.

Supplies Brought In

Supplies for the small defending garrison were coming in from Miaochungchenn, running a gauntlet of machine gun fire.

There the Japanese had swung around in an effort to cut off the village. The Chinese, however, still kept the neck of the bottle open.

The whole area from Kiangwan, four miles to the west, was honeycombed with artillery pits shielding the bursts of fire from light field pieces and innumerable machine gun nests. Northwestward toward the Liuhang Hinterland the territory was swarming with soldiers.

Chinese Hang On

The village of Miaochungchenn, or what was left of it after a week of bombardment, was still in Chinese hands. Although the Japanese have claimed for several days that they controlled this strategic point, their front lines actually were three-quarters of a mile to the east.

Brick walls of buildings there were tottering, but the garrison of 3,000 Chinese soldiers seemed prepared to hold out indefinitely.

Belief prevailed that large Japanese reinforcements would arrive over the week-end and that they would be landed in the international settlement in spite of the request of the powers to Tokyo, because of lack of wharf facilities elsewhere.

Probable Sudden End of Strife Seen

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27— As military experts in Washington see the Shanghai conflict, both the Japanese and Chinese forces are showing signs of weariness and they would not be surprised at a sudden ending of the undeclared war.

A month of fighting in a sea of mud under snow and rain without decisive gain on either side, the experts hold, is putting both armies into a position where truce proposals would be received with sympathy.

Marion Man, Once Active in Local Industrial Companies, Dies.

ILL SINCE LAST NOVEMBER

Helped Organize Osgood Co. and Was Secretary of Marion Steam Shovel Co.

Arthur E. Cheney, 73, one of the organizers of the Osgood Co. and a former secretary and general sales manager of the Marion Steam Shovel Co., died today at 3:10 a. m. at City hospital.

Mr. Cheney had been in ill health since November, and recently underwent an operation. Complications following obstruction of the intestines and a serious illness of influenza, caused his death.

Came Here 45 Years Ago

At the age of 19 Mr. Cheney became a steam shovel operator. When he came here 45 years ago to join the Marion Steam Shovel Co. he had a wide experience in the operation and construction of power shovels. His first duties with the local company took him to all parts of the United States as an expert in shovel construction.

Mr. Cheney was subsequently elected a director of the company and later was made secretary and general sales manager. He served in the latter capacities until 1910 when he resigned.

With the late John D. Owens and Harry J. Barnhart, Mr. Cheney organized the Osgood Co. about two years after his retirement from the Marion Steam Shovel Co.

Mr. Cheney became secretary and general manager of this company until 1919 when he retired. Since that time he has not engaged actively in business.

Prominent Mason

Mr. Cheney was a thirty-second degree Mason. He was a member of Marion Lodge No. 70, F. and A. M., Marion Chapter No. 62, R. A. M., Marion Council No. 22, R. and S. M., Marion Commandery No. 36, K. T. and Scioto Consistory Valley of Columbus, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, 32nd Degree Mason.

He was born July 2, 1858, in Brownington, Vt., to John Cheney, a native of Albany, Vt., and Jane Lyman Cheney, a native of Hartford, Conn. He was married on Dec. 21, 1884, in Rockford, Ill., to Catherine E. Atwood, who survives him with their daughter, Mrs. Pearl Cheney, and two grandsons, Arthur and Richard, all at home. A brother George A. Cheney lives at 757 east Center street. A sister preceded him in death.

The funeral will be conducted Tuesday at 2 p. m. at the home. Dr. Jesse Swank of Springfield, O., and Dr. C. E. Turley of Epworth M. E. church will officiate. Burial will be made in Marion cemetery.

BARN MURDER IS TAKEN BY JURY TODAY

Suicide or Murder Is Question Facing Jurors as Arguments End.

DEFENDANT IS NERVOUS

Shows Strain During Pleas; All Evidence Is Circumstantial.

Special to The Star

UPPER SANDUSKY, Feb. 27—Suicide or murder?

The fate of a man is hanging in the balance as a jury in common pleas court here deliberates on the charge of first degree murder against Roy E. Bowers, 58, accused of slaying his wife.

The jury took the case at 1:45 p. m. today after Judge C. H. Huston of Mansfield completed his 35-minute charge read to the jury immediately after the noon recess.

The jury may decide the case in one of four ways, or it may fail to agree. The four verdicts possible to return are first degree murder without mercy, first degree murder with mercy, second degree murder and not guilty.

Bowers and his attorneys have attempted to prove that Mrs. Bowers committed suicide and that the husband, at her request, tried to make her death appear like an accident. They said Mrs. Bowers feared paralysis and loss of her voice.

The prosecution, through circumstantial evidence, points to Mrs. Bowers' death as a clear case of murder. The state insists that Bowers placed a shot gun through a hole in the cow stable partition and blew off the top of his wife's skull. Financial difficulties were given as the motive.

Arguments Completed

Attorneys for the state and the defendant completed their arguments shortly before noon. Court immediately recessed and Judge C. H. Huston of Mansfield, sitting on the local bench by assignment, will begin reading his charge to the jury at 1 p. m. The jury is expected to get the case at about 2 p. m.

Assistant Prosecutor A. K. Hall demanded the death penalty for Bowers in the closing argument for the state. The defense maintained throughout the arguments that Mrs. Bowers took her own life.

Bowers appeared to have lost some of the composure that hid his emotions during the first days of the trial. Listening to the attorneys arguments through a headphone, the defendant appeared nervous and was constantly tapping his feet on the floor.

Prosecutor Creger in his argument asked the jury to return a verdict of guilty without recommending mercy, a verdict which carries with it the death penalty. He stated that at the beginning of the trial four theories were possible as to how Mrs. Bowers met her death. First that of an accident;

BUCYRUS YOUTH HURT IN RAILROAD YARDS

John Pepper, 18, Taken to City Hospital for Amputation of Foot.

An attempt to board a freight train early this morning in the local yards cost John Pepper, 18, of Bucyrus, his right foot. The foot, badly mangled, was amputated at City hospital.

It is believed that Pepper tried to climb on the caboose of a northbound Pennsylvania freight train. He said that he had been waiting at a "red light" for a truck going through to Bucyrus and growing tired of waiting, had gone into the railroad yards. He was unable to recall trying to get on the train.

The accident occurred near the Silver Street crossing of the Pennsylvania railroad at 4:30 a. m. The train was stopped and Pepper taken into the caboose. The W. C. Boyd ambulance was called and took him to City hospital where his right foot was amputated.

FORD SET FOR HUGE NEW CAR PRODUCTION

"Will Risk Everything" To Start Industrial Revival, He Says.

By The Associated Press

DETROIT, Mich., Feb. 27—Declaring he was prepared to "risk everything we've got" in an effort to start an industrial revival, Henry Ford announced today that he has provided himself with stocks of materials anticipating a possible production program of 1,500,000 cars a year.

He estimated his program will call for the expenditure this year of $300,000,000 in Detroit and Michigan alone for materials, shipping and labor. Materials throughout the United States, he said, would 'aggregate $52,000,000 a month.

Production of the new models recently announced, Ford said, probably will begin next week. In the Detroit area alone, he said, 100,000 men will be employed at the standard minimum wage of $6 a day and upward. In addition, he added, 5,500 suppliers of parts and materials throughout the United States will give employment to 200,000 more.

Ford incidentally spiked the rumor that he was planning a radical change in sales terms. "There is no truth in these reports," he

SLIDES AND FLOODS MENACE WASHINGTON

13 Lives Already Lost as Melting Snow Fields Loose Torrents.

By The Associated Press

SEATTLE, Feb. 27 — Warm Chinook winds and heavy rains brought to western Washington today a great menace from floods and earth and snow slides with 13 lives already taken.

In the mountains of the western Cascades, a torrent of water and mud swept away part of the little community of Edgewick yesterday, and four women, two children and one man were lost.

Melting snow fields, in addition to threatening slides and devastation, filled the rivers and in western Washington, the Stillaguamish, Snoqualmie, Green, Puyallup, Raging and Stuck rivers were bank-full or overflowing.

From Canada south to the Columbia river, highways and railroad lines were blocked by washouts, and many families marooned or fleeing to higher ground.

At Edgewick, a wall of water 200 yards wide and 15 feet deep broke loose from a natural basin.

The others who lost their lives in the past two days were two victims of a flood at High Point, and four men entombed by an avalanche of snow in the Skagit river canyon.

CHICAGO GANG LEADER MUST GO TO PRISON

GOES TO LEAVENWORTH

By the Associated Press

CHICAGO, Feb. 27—The conviction of "Scarface Al" Capone on charges of evading income tax laws was affirmed today by the United States circuit court of appeals.

Ever since he was sentenced by Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson last October 24, Capone has been in the Cook county jail where he did not get credit on his penitentiary term. Only yesterday the United States marshal placed a special 24-hour guard at his cell because of the many rumors that he was still controlling his gang and possibly planning a break if his appeal were denied.

Cheated Government

In a 5,000 word opinion the high court upheld the indictments in which the gangster was charged with cheating the government of some $200,000 in tax, the verdict in which he was convicted on five of 21 counts and his sentence of 11 years and fine of $50,000.

Only the intervention of the United States supreme court can prevent Capone's removal to the federal penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kansas.

The appeal was based almost entirely on the alleged insufficiency of the indictment. Capone's attorneys argued that the indictments were so vague, Capone could have been tried any number of times on them and that because of their general nature it was impossible to present a proper defense.

Now in County Jail

Capone's stay at the county jail was practically at his own choosing. Refused bail, he was permitted to remain in the county jail pending his appeal. It was made clear that if he elected to begin getting credit for the time served by going on down to Leavenworth he could do so.

The government indicated it would ask Monday for Capone's immediate removal from the Cook county jail to the federal penitentiary at Leavenworth.

HOOVER CREDIT BILL BECOMES LAW TODAY

Measure Designed To Buttress U. S. Finance and Spur Economic Recovery.

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27—The federal reserve credit expansion act, designed to place billions in cash and credit at the use of commercial and industrial activity, becomes law today.

President Hoover promised, upon completion of the final congressional touches yesterday, to sign it today.

Distinctly technical in its operation, it has the objective of assuring the banker, the businessman, the industrialist and the man in the street, that there is no reachable bottom to American cerdit. It will buttress member banks of the Federal reserve system, and through them lift the strain on thousands of other banks.

Its enactment completes, practically, the general reconstruction program of the administration, flanking the Reconstruction Corporation's loans to pinched enterprise and the campaign against hoarding.

HANE CASE BEFORE U. S. GRAND JURY

A federal grand jury in Toledo yesterday examined witnesses in the case of H. W. "Bud" Hane, former cashier of the Marion National bank, charged with embezzlement.

The jury is considering 70 cases, and is not expected to report before late next week.

R. M. Wilhelm, county prosecutor, John Wiedemann, city prosecutor, and Harry J. Merchant, former assistant cashier of the bank, were among the witnesses examined yesterday in connection with the Hane case.

FOURTH MAN DEAD IN GANG WARFARE

By The Associated Press

CLEVELAND, O., Feb. 27—The fourth victim of Cleveland's gang vengeance, this week, Charles J. Gentile, was found shot to death near the Cleveland airport early today.

Gentile, police said, was a beer runner of the Lonardo faction, once supreme in the corn sugar business here. His body, with three bullet wounds in the head, was lying along a much-frequented road.

He had been carefully laid out on grass alongside the road. In his hand was a half-burned cigar. He was well dressed.

GUNMEN RAID NIGHT CLUB

One Bandit Slain, British Golf Star Shot in Florida Holdup.

By The Associated Press

MIAMI, Fla., Feb. 27—An unidentified bandit was killed, three others wounded, and T. Philip Perkins, former British amateur golf champion, shot in the hip when one of the robbers tried to use his body for a shield in the attempt holdup of a fashionable night club here early today.

The shooting occurred in the Emassy club shortly before 3 a. m when two policemen, who were eating in the kitchen at the time the holdup started, opened fire.

Several Wounded

Other wounded were: George Meyers, 40, of Tulsa, Okla., identified as a member of the robber band; Gene Eckman, 50, reputedly another of the robbers, critically wounded near the heart; an unidentified bandit who escaped; George Fratton, 30, kitchen employe at the club, shot in the right leg; John Burns, also known as Frank Woods, employe, shot in the left leg.

Perkins was among the guests at the club. The bandits sought to hold up the gambling casino of the club.

Meyers was wounded critically by a shot in the mouth

While the leader and two of the band proceeded across the floor with guns held ready, the remaining three lined up the kitchen employes and attempted to shut large double doors between the kitchen and dining room.

With the attention of their guards momentarily drawn, the two officers drew their pistols, one apparently hitting a bandit's sawed-off shotgun in such a way as to discharge the magazine. The leader dropped. Guests scurried for cover.

Bandits Open Fire

The bandits in the dining room attempted to shoot the two policemen, while the bandit pair in the Casino opened fire into the dining room.

One of the bandits seized Perkins, to use him as a shield, while another shot back into the Casino, wounding Burns. Perkins was hit by a stray bullet, and both of the bandits dropped, wounded by fire from the policemen's pistols.

Marion Woman Has Rare Flower Now in Bloom

An unusually rare and beautiful flower is the sacred lily of East India owned by Mrs. B. Tristram of 318 east Center street which is in full bloom at her home at present.

The single flower which grows straight from the stem, measures 15 and one-half inches from the tip to the lower edge and is 10¼ inches across. The flower, together with the stem is five feet, seven inches in height. The lily is deep red in color and inside the base shades into gold tints and then into the green stem. The stem is slightly spotted and has green foliage.

Mrs. Tristram has had the plant about nine years and during this time it has bibloomed three or four times. It does not require any great amount of care she says and may be placed in the garden during the summer months when it needs plenty of water. In the fall she wraps the plant in paper and removes it to a place where it will not be reached by frost and brings it into the light when she wishes it to bloom. A secret of the plant is that it can be made to bloom at any time by placing it in the light. Aside from what clings to the roots there is no dirt around the plant and it requires no water when made to bloom indoors.

The plant bears a number of smaller bulbs which Mrs. Tristram gives to her friends when she removes it from the garden in the fall. The plant blooms annually after the first blooming which is usually after the sixth year. A powerful order, unpleasant to many persons, might take away some of the enjoyment of admiring the unusual plant.

DEATH IS DEMANDED FOR ROY E. BOWERS

Suicide or Murder Is Question Facing Jurors as Arguments End.

second, that of suicide; third, murdered by a third party, and fourth, murdered by Roy E. Bowers. At the present time only two of these remain as a result of the testimony, that of suicide, which is claimed by the defense, and that of murder by Roy Bowers, which is claimed by the prosecution. No evidence was introduced to claim that her death was due to an accident or that she was murdered by a third party, he said.

Creger maintained that under the circumstances it would have been impossible for her to have committed suicide and the only conclusion to be drawn was that Grace Bowers was murdered by her husband, Roy Bowers.

Bowers was still on the stand when court convened Friday afternoon and said that he couldn't remember how long he maintained his wife's death was an accident. When he found her body he didn't feel her pulse or do anything to determine if there was still life in the body. The telegram to Pearl Bailey was introduced. It was signed "Roy." He does not know how many trips he made to Michigan but that one week was the longest he ever stayed. On one occasion Pearl Bailey came back as far as Toledo with him. When Bowers sent the telegram to Pearl Bailey after his wife's death he did not know the Michigan woman was married.

Letters About Business

On re-direct examination he explained why Pearl Bailey came back to Toledo with him. He said that she had some business there and he brought her to Toledo to save her carfare. He never had any communication with Pearl Bailey other than business letters.

Honor Stansbery, who resides in this city, followed Bowers on the stand and testified that he was not acquainted with Bowers and that he was at the Bowers farm Friday morning with Defense Attorney Stalter, Albert Young and Deputies Jonas and Martz. He told of tests made at the farm yesterday morning with the gun. Part of his testimony was taken from the jury because the shells used in making these tests were not the same as those used in the gun at the time Mrs. Bowers met her death.

Ralph Snyder, who was with Mr. Stansbery when the tests were made, was the last witness called by the defense before they rested their case. His testimony was the same as that given by Stansbery.

Ohio First Lady Has No Desire for "Promotion"

By The Associated Press

COLUMBUS, O., Feb. 27—Ohio's first lady likes her job, but she has no ambition to be first lady of the United States.

She is 26-year-old Mary White, daughter of Governor George White, and her lack of ambition is based mostly upon her consideration of her father's health.

"I think it would be a wonderful honor if father was nominated for the presidency but it would mean such a strain on his health. The governor's job is hard enough," she commented.

Miss White had no comment to make upon her father's prospects in the presidential race. "We do not talk politics at home," she said, during the 1930 campaign she was active in his behalf but since the duties of first lady have taken all her time and she has not participated in political activities.

Miss White has been the homemaker for her father for several years. Her mother died about three years ago and the burden of caring for her sister and brothers fell on her shoulders. One brother is a professor in an eastern college and the other two are attending Princeton university. Charlotte, her sister, is a student at Ohio State university.

EIGHT ANSWER CALL AT REVIVAL HERE

Evangelist Tells Hearers They Must Live Up to Standard.

"If we say that we are children of God and do not live up to the standard, we are liars," Mrs. Edna Beougher Hughes, evangelist at Calvary Evangelical church said last night in her sermon on the subject, "Salvation by Subtraction and Addition." Eight persons responded to the altar call.

She continued

"Another sin that confronts us is that we take things sometimes that do not belong to us. There are a lot of people who have to take things back if they expect to be saved by the Lord. It pays to settle everything with God.

"If you forsake all the world God will give you grace and power to overcome your habits and temptations. Do not think that you will lose your friends by coming to Jesus You will get into the best society in all the world."

Miss Coral Underwood sang a solo. The meetings will continue each night except Saturday next week. Mrs. Hughes will preach Sunday morning on the subject "Heaven and How to Get There" and at night on the subject, "The Final Record."

Youth scored another victory over age last night as the ninth grade basketball team of Thomas A. Edison Junior high school turned in a 48-26 victory over city junior high faculty court team in a game played on the Edison school floor.

In a second game played at Edison, the seventh grade team of the West side school scored a 21-19 victory over Vernon Heights seventh grade tossers.

CAMPBELL THROUGH WITH SPEED TRIALS

Orders Bluebird Shipped to England After Shattering Five Records.

By The Associated Press

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla., Feb. 27—After making five new world's land speed records, Sir Malcolm Campbell decided today to attempt no further trials this year and said he would ship his 12 cylinder Bluebird racing car back to England immediately. Conditions for further runs were not satisfactory today.

The freckled little Scotsman still believes his machine can do 280 miles an hour.

Despite hazardous conditions yesterday, Campbell slashed three distance records to pieces, wiping them out by margins of six to 86 miles an hour. It was, he admitted later, "the best show the Bluebird has ever put on"

Nevertheless he was so keenly disappointed at failure to do better than 251.748 miles per hour for the measured mile, a fraction slower than the world mark of 253 968 he set Wednesday,

On the two days he has run, Campbell's peak was reached Wednesday when he raced southward at about 267 miles per hour, only to strike a stiff head wind and do no better than 241 on the way north. Yesterday his best for the mile was 257 miles per hour, though he was losing considerable traction, due to ridges in the sand, and faced the hazard of having his goggles clouded as he was going at full speed.

ALFONSO SEEKS TO REGAIN LOST THRONE

Former King and Uncle Call for Overthrow of Spanish Government.

By The Associated Press

PARIS, Feb. 27—Former King Alfonso XIII and his uncle Alfonso Carlos, traditional pretender to the Spanish throne have issued a call to Spanish people, the Havas news agency reported from Madrid today, to overthrow the new republic in Spain.

Former King Alfonso's' manifesto, the Havas correspondent said, declared he accepted his uncle as head of the family and that they both hold that every one must unite "to save Spanish society from the wave of anarchy and communism which has invaded it to gather under the sacred flag to which I devoted my life."

The manifesto of the king's Uncle Alfonso Carlos was reported to be in the same vein. The time has come it said, to protest against the republic and a "constitution which may be the ideal of an atheist republic, born of violence in a time of misfortune, but cannot be the fundamental law of Spain."

The pretender, to whom Alfonso was reported Thursday to have resigned his immediate rights to the throne, added, the reported manifesto said:

"I appeal to all and in the first place to my dearest nephew, Alfonso De Bourbon, upon whom all my rights devolve at my death, to collaborate in giving Spain a truly Christian constitution."

HOOVER MESSAGE DUE NEXT WEEK

Will Recommend Means of Aiding Court Procedure.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27—President Hoover's recommendations for closing avenues to escape to criminals haled before the federal courts, will go to congress early next week A special message dealing with this situation, with correction of the bankruptcy laws, and relief of court congestion, will be sent up. It embodies the result of more than two years of study.

The President held it back deliberately until after the most pressing economic reconstruction legislation was out of the way. Now no reason is seen for withholding the legal suggestions.

The President would have wider latitude given the accused to waive grand jury indictment, thus getting unimportant or undefendable cases out of the way. Procedure in district courts would be simplified and statutes covering criminal appeals, so tightened as to block mere time-killing by defendant's attorneys. More judges would be appointed.

Greatest Traders in the World, These Chinese, Will Finds Out in Manchuria

BY WILL ROGERS

WELL all I know is just what I read in the papers. And say its so cold out here in this Manchuria that you cant read. Even if you had something to read which you havent. Sitting here in Mukden thats the town that all the Japanese and Chinese War news comes from, you know its been on the front pages of every paper for months and months. It used to be the old Capitol of Manchuria when Manchuria was really a Kingdom.

They have had Emperors and things here for 2 or 3 thousand years. Its kinder in the range of that old Repscallion Ganghis Khan. He ranged up and down these parts he captured everything from Japan clear on right to the very gates of what is now Europe. He got clear to Vienna, and did it all horseback.

Well this is right up his alley this place. Its got an old walled city here, where they close the gates at night. Went down there yesterday with some Newspaper men to buy some Curios, that is Rare Jade. They have been out here for years and savvy Jade, so they seem to know what they were doing. But I dont know how anybody would hardly get the best of a Chinaman in a trade, so I figure my friends dident get away with any bargain. It was sure cold, and in each little shop there would be a whole family. When you say a whole family in China I mean all the Sons he has, all the Grandsons, all the other kin folks. They are great family people and they all live togeather. When the Son is married he brings his wife home and there they all stay.

Wild About Clocks

They had some wonderful old Curios in these old shops. Course they might have been like ours made the week before someplace but they looked pretty ancient to me. You know what these Chinese was nutty about was Clocks. They say most of them were made in France and Switzerland, as they never did make any out here, but they sure was cuckoo about em.

They live in the back end of these places. The way they work the heat or the stove is they have a little bit of a thing like a fireplace. Its generally right under their bed, and their bed is built down solid to the ground. Its not a bed, its just a high platform built against the back of the wall. Well they have little openings, not pipes, but just little long troughs, or alleyways running through the masonary that makes the foundation of the bed, and this little heat from this dinky little stove, it runs on through these little passages, and that is what heats the bed. It dont have a thing to do with the House but at night they have enough fire till they can get to sleep. They all bundle up there on the one big long bed. Its a regular Brigham Young affair.

The Japanese they sleep on a mattress on the floor, but the Chinese get up on this shelf. We also went into a Fur store as they wanted to get a kind of a lap robe to use in a Ricksha. Thats one of the little carts they pull you around in. They can just hit a long trot and take you to the end of the road. These fellows however dont live long. They are so poorly paid you have to give what would be less than a couple of cents in our money, and then there is so many of em, the business is overdone. Its like everything at home, Overproduction.

Tough on Dogs

Well you ought to have seen these Furs, if they dident have some of the queerest looking old Pelts in there, and what do you think they were, well they were every kind of fur in the World, but they were all dog fur. Thats what they really were. Of course there was Fox and Beaver and Kolinsky and Mink, but all made from practically the same Dog. You see those old Dogs up there are kinder semi wild, and they roam the country and they are raised in the Villages, then when the family get broke why old Fido is executed, and his hide brings in some rice, and his meat brings in all the neighbors, and they have a feed, "Come tonight we are eating the Flee Hound."

There is no two of the Mutts colored alike. They look like everything that ever wore hair, and on these Chinese Streets, they dont sell hardly anything in the stores they move it all out on the streets. Of all the junk they are cooking right there before you on a little Charcoal fire. All Kinds of fish, and queer do dads. Then the Barbers are out there. The Tonsorial Parlors are right in the middle of the road. They also wash out their ears too, all in the same sitting. When they cut hair, Boy, they do it with a thing like a Cycle or Scythe. They get it off and you are cleaned as far as the hair is concerned. They dont wear the Cues anymore, that is you do see a few but not many, its kinder old fashioned, and is kinder like wearing a Derby hat.

"Feel" Prices

Did I tell you how they traded? Well they wear great long Kimonas, with sleeves about six inches longer than the hand, and in cold weather they run each hand up each sleeve, like a Muff. Well if two of them are trading, one each runs his hand up the others sleeve, and by feeling each other fingers they telegraph how much is offered and the other one how much he will take. Well if they are a couple of good quick Traders they can get the price of a Pair of Sox agreed on along about the middle of the afternoon.

Course the time means nothing to em, neither one is going anywhere. They are everybody says the sharpest Traders that there is in the World. There used to be a Jewish Settlement many years ago and these just finally wore them out and gobbled em up, they couldent start with the Chinese. No Pigeon English up north China where we are. That is down South at Canton, there is where all the American Chinaman come from is Canton. I sure am going down there. I want to see the home Town of some of these. They are a great people they dont care who has got Manchuria, all they want to do is just to get you in a trade of some kind and they are fixed. They are not what we call "Sharpers" they are just good legitimate Traders. You got to be good to live among 400 million others.—Copyright, 1932, by the McNaught Syndicate, Inc.

A SERMONETTE

BY REV. O. F. LAUGHBAUM, A. M., D. D.

Bucyrus pastor filling the pulpit of the First United Brethren church in the absence of Rev. Carl V. Roop.

Isaiah 40:8—"The grass withereth, the flower fadeth; but the word of God shall stand forever."

THE productions of gifted men may be admired and approved, but they may be superceded by others; so that we could have no assurance that the conclusions of today might not be recalled or overshadowed by those of tomorrow. The Divine element is required to produce a standard. The Bible thus remains a unique book.

Every Christian mind recognizes in the Bible, a fuller knowledge, and a diviner authority than are found in any other book. We are conscious of the enlightening, ennobling purifying, humanizing, divinizing influence of the mind of God revealed in the Word of God.

The marvelous unity; the infinite variety, the inimitable pathos; the matchless sublimity; the power over souls; its holy law; its attractiveness for all classes, throughout all centuries, and in all lands; the invisible yet omnipotent power which goes with it everywhere,—uplifting society; ennobling civilization; and blessing households,—all these truths leave us, no more to doubt the stupendous fact, that the Bible is a divinely inspired book, and that God is its author.

The Bible is remarkable for its antiquity. It started in the world's infancy It grew when kingdoms and empires were passing away. It withstood storms of fire Tyranny issued edicts against it and infidelity proclaimed against it, yet it stood. Mohammedanism hurled its anathemas at the Bible, but it continues to live.

Marvelous book, full of divine life and power No one can touch even the hem of its garment, without being healed. No one can come near enough even to stone it, without being blessed. It stands alone, without a rival; even its enemies themselves being judges.

The Stars Say—

For Friday, Feb. 26

For Sunday, Feb. 28.

SUNDAY'S horoscope is a generally adverse one, with difficulty in making much progress in anything attempted, with the exception that the clergy or others engaged in diligent employment may receive some need of recognition from superiors Elders may confer benefits, but prudence and precaution are enjoined.

Those whose birthday it is may have a year of difficult situations to confront, but close application to the employment and affairs in hand may win the recognition and support of superiors or elderly persons or institutions. Also there may be some gain through real possessions or tenancies, but generally the affairs call for prudent, calm and wise management. A child born on this day is likely to be diligent, hard working and steadfast, but may have to adapt itself to many trying and difficult situations in life.

For Monday, Feb. 29.

MONDAY'S astrological forecast is for an exceedingly interesting, progressive and prosperous state of affairs, with sudden moves, unexpected promotion or favors from those in places of power and position, with the purely personal affairs and conditions reacting in great pleasure and surprising romantic adventure. Money, friends, position, love, dominate the day with much satisfaction, but control mental reactions and be not surprised at some minor anxiety or visitation.

Those whose birthday it is may prepare for a year of great adventure in the private and business life. Unexpected promotion or favors from those in high places, sudden developments in romantic affiliations with much gratification and happiness. But keep the mind in steady control and be prepared for some slight bereavement or care. A child born on this day may be versatile, scientific, artistic, original and adventurous, with social and romantic qualities making for happiness, success and position in life.

Daily Proverb—"A tree that affords thee shade, do not order it to be cut down!"

The battle casualties in Shanghai for the four-day period ended February 24 were 2,200. That fracas over there may yet turn into a war!

Three gangsters shot to death in Cleveland, and two others likely to die! The crime situation in the Forest City is weekly being simplified.

The Washington Star tells about a baby in the national capital which has gained 600 pounds during the last twelve months, doubling its weight. It might be well to explain that it's a baby rhinoceros.

Arrested as a bandit, a Chicago boy of nineteen confessed to the police authorities to fifty robberies since last August. Naturally there will be the customary number of mushy sentimentalists, who will demand that he be let off lightly "owing to his extreme youth."

Bucharest reports the arrival at Olanesti of nine bullet-wounded survivors of a party of sixty-two Russians who attempted to escape from the soviet republic by crossing the Dniester over the ice. More "Liberty and Equality."

Dr. Boris Sokoloff, the Russian scientist, says that "any girl can marry any man in the world if she repeats very often to him these four words, 'You are so wonderful.'" It's an awful slam at mankind, but there's no getting away from the fact that the doctor may know about what he is talking.

Having purchased a dozen eggs, sold to him a day or two ago as "strictly fresh," a citizen of Richmond Hill, New York, found one of them dated 1926, which again raises the old question—"When is a 'strictly fresh' egg strictly fresh?"

Japan is said to be building her navy to the limit set out in the London treaty. No ground for criticism of Nippon for so doing. Where criticism rests is on the powers which are not manifesting equal wisdom, among the countries at fault in this respect being our own.

Some federal securities, both Liberties and Treasuries, climbed to new highs, Friday, which means that big financial interests are again putting their money into bonds and indicates that pressing need for currency on their part no longer exists. A good sign, that!

By a vote of 368 to seventy-five, the German reichstag yesterday defeated a communist motion to "stop payment of tribute based on the Versailles treaty and annul all private debts to capitalist countries." Another sign that Germany is yet far from the stage where she is ready to emulate soviet Russia.

A One-Man Job.

There is more than a suggestion of sarcasm in President Hoover's brief message to congress concerning the legislative branch's action in refusing to let the work of federal reorganization rest in his hands. He will be "entirely happy" if his repeated messages "succeed in securing action in an effective fashion." He might well be. "Action in an effective fashion" would mean that the Hoover administration had achieved success where many have failed. President Taft tried it, and got as far as a commission on efficiency and economy, which was killed off by the simple method of denying it an appropriation.

President Wilson, to be sure, was given power to reorganize government bureaus, but only for the sake of efficency during the war and six months after its termination. In the Harding administration, congress instituted a joint commission on reorganization and its recommendations were embodied in a bill allowed to die despite the attempts of Mr. Harding's successor, Calvin Coolidge, to get action. President Hoover, therefore, has no reason to believe that congress will, or can, do the job it has taken away from him.

The growth of all units of government in the United States has been allowed to take place in pretty much of a haphazard way. Expansion was unnoticed because it seemed to be in proportion to the general expansion of the nation. It required hard times with their accompaniment of falling revenues and higher taxes to reveal the fact that government is too top-heavy and unwieldy to adjust itself to the changes of deflation.

The reorganization that the public demands could be done best by one man following a definite plan. The larger the group undertaking the work the more numerous will be the deterrent factors standing in its way. President Hoover sought the responsibility from congress, and was refused. He has good reason to suspect that nothing further will come of his project for reorganization.

There's Plenty of Hay.

It is unfortunate that politicians must make hay whether the sun shines or not. A crop must be gathered even in the gloom of economic recession. Under the jealously defended two-party system there can be no political truces of long duration.

It is not surprising, therefore, that the undertone of bickering over who deserves credit for national reconstruction measures made effective to date promises at last to break into open quarreling. This is a presidential year; Democrats are advertising their belief that they face a great opportunity. They must make their hay, or be caught short.

The necessity to conduct future business of congress in a partisan atmosphere, while it is clearly understandable, is none the less regrettable. Beyond any doubt, credit for the government's achievements is divided, if not equally between Republicans and Democrats, at least in fair proportion. Yet, for the sake of the votes to be polled next November, each party must pose as the only deserving claimant of whatever honor there is to be bestowed.

Particularly is it necessary for the Democratic party to play the part for all it is worth. Nominally the party of the opposition, it has been until recently a source of support which, had it been denied, would have tied the administration's hands. A dilemma was presented. The welfare of the nation demanded certain emergency legislation the passage of which would redound inevitably at first to the administration's credit. Democrats, be it to their credit, trusted public judgment to discern their part in its formation and passage. Fair judgment will not deny them the credit they deserve.

President Hoover has said that fighting the recession is like fighting a war. Continuing his figure of speech, the war was not, could not have been, waged by one man. It has been a national effort, supported by all patriots regardless of party. The President has been the commander-in-chief, the same position he occupies in real war.

A review of the tactical defense reveals even more plainly the non-partisan complexion of the effort.

First, there was a conference of industrial and labor leaders to insure against a conflict of capital and labor. The business recession has been marked by the understanding cooperation of these two elements.

There was next a campaign for employment in construction work by public and private enterprise.

The concentrated attack of the drouth in the summer of 1930 was flanked by government and private aid; later, measures were taken to mitigate unemployment by an organized national effort.

Just as it seemed the tide of battle might turn, the threatened collapse of Europe made necessary the now famous moratorium.

The National Credit association, now overshadowed by the Reconstruction Finance corporation, was another maneuver. Liberalization of the federal reserve system and the campaign against hoarding bring the program up to date.

Surely there is no necessity for either political party to fear that the people have not praise enough to give both parties their just dues in the labor of reconstruction. Might it not possibly be the better political method in the coming months to avoid hard times as an issue and give the public credit for sufficient intelligence to understand that neither party, working alone, can dispel the gloom?

Raw sugar dropped to a new low level this week, when it was delivered at customers' plants at 2.88 cents a pound, of which about two cents went for the federal duty. Twelve years ago the same product brought twenty-two cents. An example of what eight years of economic and political dickerings among producers and consuming nations to stem the tide of a mounting sugar surplus by artificial stabilization will do!

It's hard to understand how James C. Stone, chairman of the farm board, has the nerve to claim that cutting the salaries of members from $12,000 to $9,600 would be "unfair." The woods are full of men who could lose the public almost as much and would be willing to do it at half the latter figure.

The why of the resignations of the chief of the Philadelphia bureau of charities and corrections and the chief of its commissary has been made plain. The resignations were tendered when it was discovered that the two were eating shad roe at $1.25 a pound, oysters in the half shell and other expensive foods at public expense while their charges in the city home for the indigent were served fare described as "terrible." It's a situation always possible in cities where political corruption gains a hold.

It has become known that a loan of approximately $1,000,000 made by the Reconstruction Finance corporation was returned within five days by the bank to which it was made with the statement that the attitude of its depositors had changed so greatly during the five days that the keeping of the extra $1,000,000 was no longer necessary. Just another indication that the hoarding trend has about run its course.

American excavators working in Athens have dug up the sculptural bronze head of a young woman dating back to the fifth century B. C., which is held to be the finest piece of sculpture ever dug up in Greece. In their enthusiasm, the American excavators are certainly taking in a lot of ground and covering a long period of time.

The war department, on the order of President Hoover, has revived the Order of the Purple Heart, established a century and a half ago by General George Washington as an award for bravery on the part of enlisted men in the Revolutionary war. There should be recognition of conspicuous bravery which may be awarded without endless red tape, and there could be no better time than the present in which to work the restoration of an order established by the "Father of His Country."

Editorial Opinion.

WAITING ON ENGLAND.

Secretary Stimson's letter to Senator Borah concerning America's Far Eastern policy offers nothing new, but it is an admirable and forceful statement of our historic policy, founded in John Hay's concept of the open door and formalized in the nine-power treaty of 1922. It not only lays out clearly the policy of this country, affirming the territorial integrity of China, but it exposes the underlying philosophy of that policy.

That philosophy is postulated in the right of the Chinese people to enjoy reasonable freedom from foreign pressure through the trying period of reconstruction that must follow a total revolution in politics and economics. It is built further on the equal rights of all nations to share in the opportunities for trade in China during that period of transition.

The significant parts of the letter, apart from this, lie first in the implied assertion that Japan is guilty of violating the Kellogg-Briand pact and the nine-power treaty, and second in the warning that America can go no farther in defense of China's integrity until other powers join us in the stand we have taken.

Considered in legal terms, Washington's flurry of notes to Japan have set up a strong position. We have refused to recognize any new treaty which is founded in Japanese aggression, and we have said we would hold Japan primarily responsible for any injury to American life or property. In short, we have labeled Japan as the aggressor, with the responsibilities thereof.

England, which must share any firm policy in the Orient, has not joined us in this emphatic stand. Unless, and until she does, we are not able to go farther in the Oriental crisis. Japan just now is shot through with dissatisfaction, aware that world opinion is against her. Foreign pressure might be enough now to bring a change of Nippon's policy, but only if it comes from both America and Britain.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

FAVORS A SALES TAX.

You say "the sales tax is as fair as any tax can be." Is it not a fact that practically all taxes, no matter upon what or whom they may be "levied" are ultimately resolvable into sales taxes? Is it not true that the final source of nearly all taxes is located in the consumer cost price?

As we see it, the newly-proposed sales tax, as such, is neither good nor bad. It simply is the only kind of tax that is possible. Whether the capital tax is an exception depends largely upon definition.

The actual operation of the sales tax would be no different than the present sales tax. Exactly the same people who now pay taxes would be paying them if the newly-supposed system were adopted, only they would be paying more. Precisely the same people who now gather together the taxes would be doing so with the sales tax system, only they too would have an added burden.

As we understand the sales tax it would be different from our present system only in that it would make it more possible for each person to know that he does pay taxes and how much. If the government must have more revenue, which we deny, then the sales tax is by all means the thing we want. We think it would be a splendid thing to abolish the present blind, deaf and dumb system of taxation and substitute for it the open sales tax. If that were done, it might teach the poor their folly of voting for every bond issue and tax levy that comes along, because they might discover that in the end these burdens fall heaviest upon their shoulders. Indeed we think this system of taxation might enlighten the world in other ways. It might possibly dissipate the delusion so universally held that the payment of taxes can be shifted from one group of citizens to another, when in reality only the gathering together of taxes can be so shifted. It might also teach that group which possesses most of the earth's physical property their folly in believing that they pay the bulk of taxes, from which they have long derived the idea that therefore they should be specially privileged in matters of government and legislation.

If we must have more revenue to operate our government, already run amuck, then we agree with you that the proposed sales tax is the thing. It might at least be a start toward something better. Frederick C. Smith.

Cancer Is Like a Fire.

BY ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.

All the time we are reading in the newspapers about cancer and new methods for its diagnosis and treatment. Too little emphasis is placed by the public on the early recognition of this dread disease. Cancer has proved fatal in many cases because the disease had existed for some time before it was recognized and treated.

Usually the early stages of cancer are painless and produce no inconvenience, but as time goes on the symptoms gradually develop. Frequently, the first sign of cancer is a lump or swelling. If this is found in the breast, even though no pain exists the symptoms should not be disregarded. It is best to be on the safe side and be told by your physician whether it is important.

Please remember that any persistent sore of the tongue, mouth or lips in a person above thirty-five years of age requires attention. Very often, as a result of a poorly-fitted dental plate, or because of a broken tooth, a sore spot develops. If neglected, this might develop into cancer.

Another sign of this disease is bleeding or discharge from an orifice of the body. This is a danger signal which should never be neglected. Many overlook its importance because there is no pain.

A very common complaint found in individuals who are negligent of their health is chronic indigestion. Persistent indigestion with loss of weight, arouses suspicion of cancer.

Cancer is not contagious. Many fear contracting the disease by contact with afflicted persons. There is no need for this worry. To be safe, only the simple rules of cleanliness must be observed.

The progress of cancer has frequently been compared to that of a fire. At first there is only a small spark that can be easily extinguished. If the spark is ignored, flames will spread and the fire become more and more difficult to control. When entirely neglected the fire will develop to such an extent that it can not be extinguished.

One of the best means of discovering the first spark of this disease is the periodic physical examination. A complete examination should be had at least once a year. This should be the rule for every individual over thirty-five years of age.

The medical profession is now equipped to combat this disease by means of surgery, the X-ray and radium. Not only are these methods used to cure the disease, but also to prevent it. They are of little avail when cancer has existed for a long time and has been neglected.

If you suspect cancer, or are worried about any abnormality, do not rely upon home remedies or patented medicines. It is your duty to consult immediately with a competent physician, or go to a recognized clinic.

A Washington Daybook.

BY HERBERT PLUMMER

Washington, Feb. 27—Word drifts up from Columbia, South Carolina, that "Coley" Blease, that picturesque and colorful former United States senator, is acting in an unusual sort of way for a man who apparently has hopes of staging a political comeback.

"Coley is making no speeches and no campaigning as far as I can see," writes a friend. "If it is possible to believe such a thing he is doing nothing but planting flowers, sprinkling his lawn and quietly going about his business.

"That's something entirely new for Blease."

Last August he started the politically-minded thinking when he made a speech at a picnic down in South Carolina, saying that he would attempt to enter the senate again.

"Next year," he said, "I will appear before you in a dual role of 'Coley' your friend and 'Coley,' candidate for the United States senate."

• • •

That announcement potentially pitted him against that senate veteran, Ellison DuRant Smith, who has held his seat for twenty-four years and comes up for reelection this year.

Smith has gotten to be pretty much a habit with the people of South Carolina. Primarily South Carolina is an agricultural state. And Smith is a farmer—a real dirt farmer.

He raises cotton. As a matter of fact his connection with cotton got him into politics. He trooped around over the state for years as a field agent and general organizer for the Southern Cotton association. Contracts that he made then were cashed in on later.

Since coming to the senate Smith has become one of that body's recognized authorities on cotton. There has been little cotton legislation by congress in the last twenty years or so that does not bear traces of his handiwork somewhere.

• • •

Smith's health has not been the best in recent years. He is all right now, but illness a few years ago forced him to be absent a great deal from the senate.

There was some speculation when Blease made his announcement last summer that he perhaps contemplated Smith's retirement from the senate this year.

But Smith is only sixty-four, the age when many senators embark on their legislative careers. And with his health improved, he has no idea of stepping out at the present.

Perhaps "Coley" realizes that and has decided to fool around with his flowers. Colorful as he is, he might think twice before attempting to oust one apparently so firmly entrenched as Smith.

An Old Ohio Blue Law.

BY J. H. GALBRAITH

About as pronounced a case of blue-law legislation as could be found in any of the New England states where Puritan influence predominated is an enactment by the legislature of Ohio which bears the date of January 28, 1813. It is aimed at the billiard table, now a universally accepted means of diversion and recreation, freely offered in places of public entertainment and in homes.

This old statute provided that "if any person shall keep or procure to be kept, any billiard table in his home, outhouse or other building, he shall for each offense, on conviction, by presentment of indictment by the grand jury, be fined the sum of $100, for use of the county in which the offense was committed," and each common pleas judge was required to specifically charge the grand juries sitting in his jurisdiction concerning this sort of an offense.

It was a case no doubt where association with resorts of bad repute as a form of attraction had given the billiard table a bad reputation. Not all the opposition to the billiard table, based on moral grounds, disappeared until prohibition ended the saloon, in which the billiard table was a common means of drawing patronage.

New York Day by Day.

BY O. O. M'INTYRE

New York, Feb. 27—Should you run low things to do, here's a free tip with love kisses—don't go in for ice skating. That if you haven't skated lately. It does things you. I'm propped now on two pillows, expec ing any moment to fall apart blah-b-, like tha

In other days I was by the way of being nifty figure skater, one of the slickest o Chickamauga creek. I could spread the eag back skate in a neat circle and otherwise c cute capers. And—a few violin plucks pro fessor—I went off to the city to do and care

During intervening years skating was ju a memory. But on the radio yesterday I hear a broadcast of a skating tournament at Lak Placid and I began skimming through th telephone book for the address of a rink an in the evening off to it I skipped, tra la.

An attendant strapped on rented skates ga me a gentle push and I glided—or is it glid forth, smack into a split. But that could hap pen to anybody after so many years. So I go to my feet, tremboloed a fake laugh, steadie myself and struck out. Jingle bells, jing bells!

Take it easy. That's the way. It all come back. Slowly now. Too many are trying t get nowhere in a hurry. Glass-slick ice, a bi band and everywhere the laughter of youth Who could ask for anything more? Excep for that wobbly left ankle I'm not bad

Now for the first turn in the bend Littl quick running steps—tickety tack, tickety tac tack. See! I'm getting the hang of it. And here I am on the long stretch. Leisurely glider leaning into a graceful tilt. I'm getting better by the minute, and not a bit short-winded.

I feel great. Here's another bend. I'll tur quickly and do this one backward. No I just skim along in my conservative way I appear to tilt even better on this curve That group of girls on the sidelines are watching I'll act totally indifferent.

• • •

After all I am not seeking romance. I' here to skate and, boys, I'm skating Once al the way around and going strong. All is we I think I'll spread the eagle right here A bit crowded though, I'll wait for more roo This is about right for it. Here I go! If I get myself out of this one I'm a honey.

• • •

But for that wobbly ankle I'd made i As it was I did not stay down long. Just a quic slide on my back—psst! like that—and here I am up again all merry and bright. Off I g Charlotte at the Hippodrome used to put he heels together, toes out, and scoot in a straigh line. If nobody was looking I'd try that. Nothing risked, nothing—*$5!! That plink when m head hit the ice sounded like something cracked and my side hurts. It will be m luck to be running around with a fissure in my skull. Fisher body and a fissure skull I can get messed up in more misery just trying to relax and enjoy myself.

• • •

Get me out again after dark. Yes you wil With a court order. If that wasn't a whang on the conk I don't want a cent. I saw everything, including old whatshisname, the bi star. And somebody in the royal box tosse in a couple of moons. This is no evening o skating. It's a lesson in astronomy. Make mine a Big Dipper of linament. All I want is to drag myself back to the starting place, yank off my skates and get out of here. Imagine an old fool like me trying to be boyish and sportive anyway. Next I'll be playing lawn tennis. Thirty love, you tottering old has-been!

• • •

Skating? I should have been wheeled to bed long ago. And is that bump on my h swelling! I'll tell my wife footpads slugged me. But I put up a fight. Left three of them in the gutter. Here I go into another nip-u and plump into a fanny fall. I hope my spine is cracked, that's what I hope. That attendant standing there, grinning like a baboon. If he'd put on the skates right, nothing would have happened. Him an attendant. Attend what? Maybe he has a poor old father or brother far away from home in some grea big city among strangers trying to skate. I hope somebody—ooch—will treat them a little more kindly. Great balls of fire! What hap pened? I came in here with an upper set Almost a brand new keyboard, too.—Copyright, 1932, McNaught Syndicate, Inc.

New Marine General.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE

Peiping, Feb. 27—Peiping is one of the few places in or outside the United States to boast of having a newly-created brigadier-general of the United States marines.

Colonel James Carson Breckenridge, scion of an old southern family, educated in Russia and Germany, noted among other things for being probably the first man to rise to marine generalship without ever learning to play poker, has surrounded himself with so many stories that he is almost a legend wherever marin go. He is now General Breckenridge and under transfer to Quantico from his post commandant of the American legation guar

• • •

At the moment when "Breck" was feeling happy over his new stars, he happened to be strolling on the old Tartar wall high above the Chinese city together with a secretary of the American legation. Below them a group of Chinese students were agitating for a free ride to Nanking where they wished to voice their protest against the Japanese invasion of Manchuria. These unruly youngsters had been on the rampage for three days and the authorities were at their mercy.

"What would you do with them, general?" asked the secretary.

"I'd use flit!" came General Breckenridge's quick retort.

However, when it comes to running his own marines, the general has means of discipline much more effective and less costly. There was the young bugler whose mess call was steeped in the sourest of notes one noon. In a flash he was called before the commandant and told that unless he could blow the call again in the self-same off key he was in for a week of bread and water. Failure to obey resulted in the latter.

Again "Breck" came upon the new lieutenant who as officer of the day took advantage of the moment to have his corns pared by an obliging Chinese. With feet perked up and the Chinese at work, the officer was caught by the general who without hesitation or further comment ordered fire drill and away went the lieutenant scurrying to his task in his bare feet.

• • •

Characteristic of this newest general of the marine corps, is his outspoken frankness which perhaps is only predominated by his justness. He came to China disliking the Chinese people, and now he leaves with the same feelings. He never tried to mask his sentiments, but at the same time he never p mitted them to temper his treatment of Chinese employed in the guard compound. F the coolies and Chinese workers in whom could see but little good, he was the first co manding officer to take pains in attendi their comforts. Showers and rest room built for them, and in general, he that they got a square deal.

CHAPTER THIRTY

Interrupted Honeymoon

"O[illegible] how rich!" giggled Judy. "Come on into our place and [illegible] Tom, and have a drink. [illegible] One goo-goo eye out [illegible] in Tom's direction and all [illegible] between us."

"Except in public," coaxed Hope. "I [illegible] goo-goo to my husband in public."

"[illegible] Well, control yourself!"

Hope dressed with high concern that night, blessing her wisdom in her hasty packing, cursing the lack of a maid and the small quarters shared with Millie Seabrook.

But when at last she emerged, gowned in pale pink lace, assured by the ecstatic Millie that "you-all look divine!" she and Tom went arm and arm into the dining-salon, and were seated at a rail table on the balcony of the dining-room. Hardly had she made her effective entrance, and coyly permitted Tom to order her wine and light her cigaret, than Hope realized that Dickey and his father were seated directly opposite her on the other side of the balcony.

Dickey was looking at her. Aghast! His eyes unbelieving—as she gazed steadily straight back at him.

A voice in her ear startled. Tom trying to talk to her. But she could not tear her eyes away....

Until she saw Dickey turn to his father and say something. Put down his napkin and push back his chair. A second later Dickey had left the dining-salon!

She turned then, in spite of Hickey's troubled gaze. Turned to Tom, who was irritably pointing out Judy, who, according to their plan, was seated at a single table a few feet away.

She gave a nit-witted smile to Tom, and nodded stupidly. Heard herself inviting Judy over to join them.

She picked her way through the meal, conscious of Hickey's eyes fixed on her throughout the endless dinner.

"It worked!" she mumbled excitedly to the bride and groom. "It worked. I won't need Tom as my husband much longer. He got up and left the room, Judy. Surely that means he's jealous—he cares?"

"Pipe the way his father is watching you," Judy admonished. "Maybe that doesn't mean anything?"

"Say, couldn't we talk about our romance?" suggested Tom over the soup. "You know—just a few words here and there?"

Hope lifted her wine glass.

"May I propose a toast?" she said solemnly. "To the dearest kids in the world who let me butt in on their honeymoon. And I'd do as much for you two, God forbid!"

Not once again that evening, however, did Hope catch a glimpse of the Dales. Not at the dance, nor in the bar, nor out on deck, nor in any of the salons. Discouraged, she relinquished a fatigued Tom to Judy around 11 o'clock and went to her own cabin. Only to receive a radio at midnight that made her bluer than the sea.

The radio messages she received thereafter, as a counter-distraction to her main interest in life, burned up the ether between the old home in Westchester and the ship that was ploughing farther and farther toward the old country. Papa Ross had plenty to say.

Mama Ross, too, sent frantic radios every time she thought of it, protesting against Hope's behavior; asking where Hope had left her car, whether Hope had warm clothing with her, and finally threatening to follow Hope across on the next boat. But Goody didn't follow up her parents' outbursts with a single word, and in one way Hope felt comforted.

Goody and she had grown closer in the last few years. It was a triumph when Goody sent her own prissy little wire telling Hope that she wished her luck, and would be happy if Hope really won her love at last.

But what was more to the point, never once did Hope hear from Rusty.

Meantime three days more on ship-board had brought things to a most distressing pitch.

Dickey had shown up with a girl. A very startling, vivid, husky-voiced jane with whom Dickey played deck tennis, shuffleboard, bid at the ship's auction during the evenings, and had at his table with Hickey and himself practically every meal. The girl, so Hope instantly made her business to learn, was the leading ingenue of one of Hickey's late musicals.

Every morning and every evening Hickey bowed distantly to Hope. But never once was there a glance of recognition in Dickey's eyes.

The officials and attendants on the ship had been most kind, attentive and lenient. Certainly Hope had caused them plenty of difficulties and much speculation. In fact, the purser had personally wired her father to get an identification upon the captain's request.

But a new difficulty presented itself in the shape of Judy and her fairly ruined honeymoon.

"Look, Hope," protested Judy, close to tears. "I wish you'd quit toting Tom around like you do. After all some people on this ship know us and know you. It looks as if you're cutting me out on my own honeymoon!"

"But, Judy, you said——"

"Now, please don't try to get around me. I'm fed up, Hope. And Tom's fed up. He's terribly fed up!"

"Thanks for the compliment!"

"Listen, we don't mind being sports and helping you pull a stunt. But it isn't working. Anyone can see that. You're never going to get a rise out of Dickey. You're making a fool of yourself, and it's high time you stopped. It was a clever idea. Oh, no end. But mighty uncomfortable for me, if you don't mind my saying so."

"I can imagine. I guess I'm no go anyway you look at it."

"Oh, forget it, Hope! You should have forgotten it years ago. The man is clean gone on that actress."

Misty-eyed, Hope turned toward the port-hole of her stateroom, her back to Judy.

"Listen, Hope darling," Judy's voice softened. "I'll go through with helping you. Honest I will! If you'll only let me have my husband for this one afternoon!"

Still Hope didn't turn.

"He's so rotten sick of playing bridge," added Judy with a pathetic wail.

"He's a rotten player," mumbled Hope crossly. "Go ahead! Go to your sappy old husband! I wouldn't have a crooner for a booby prize!"

"Is that so?" flared Judy angrily. "Well, I'd hate to tell you what I think of your big tanned and scarred hero!"

And Judy left Hope's cabin, and banged the door to punctuate her statement.

So Hope only sat against the porthole weeping herself red-eyed.

It was impossible to sleep. Impossible to stay in that stateroom. Out on one of the farthest edges of the uppermost see-sawing deck, Hope wrapped herself in blankets like a cocoon, and let the salt sea spray and the salt tears fight it out between them.

It was nearly 3 a. m. when at last she stiffly got to her feet and headed against the wind to the shelter of her cabin.

Millie, as might be expected, was awake when she entered.

"Something too grand for words happened to you tonight," murmured the schoolteacher. "You won the auction!"

"I did? Honest?"

"I was just right there, when they called it out. Only it was under the name of Mrs. Thomas Post, and your friend Judy explained that you had asked her to play for you just to turn your luck."

Hope scowled. So Judy had rebelled and had announced widespread that even a bride has her pride, yes? Well, who could blame her? And who cared?

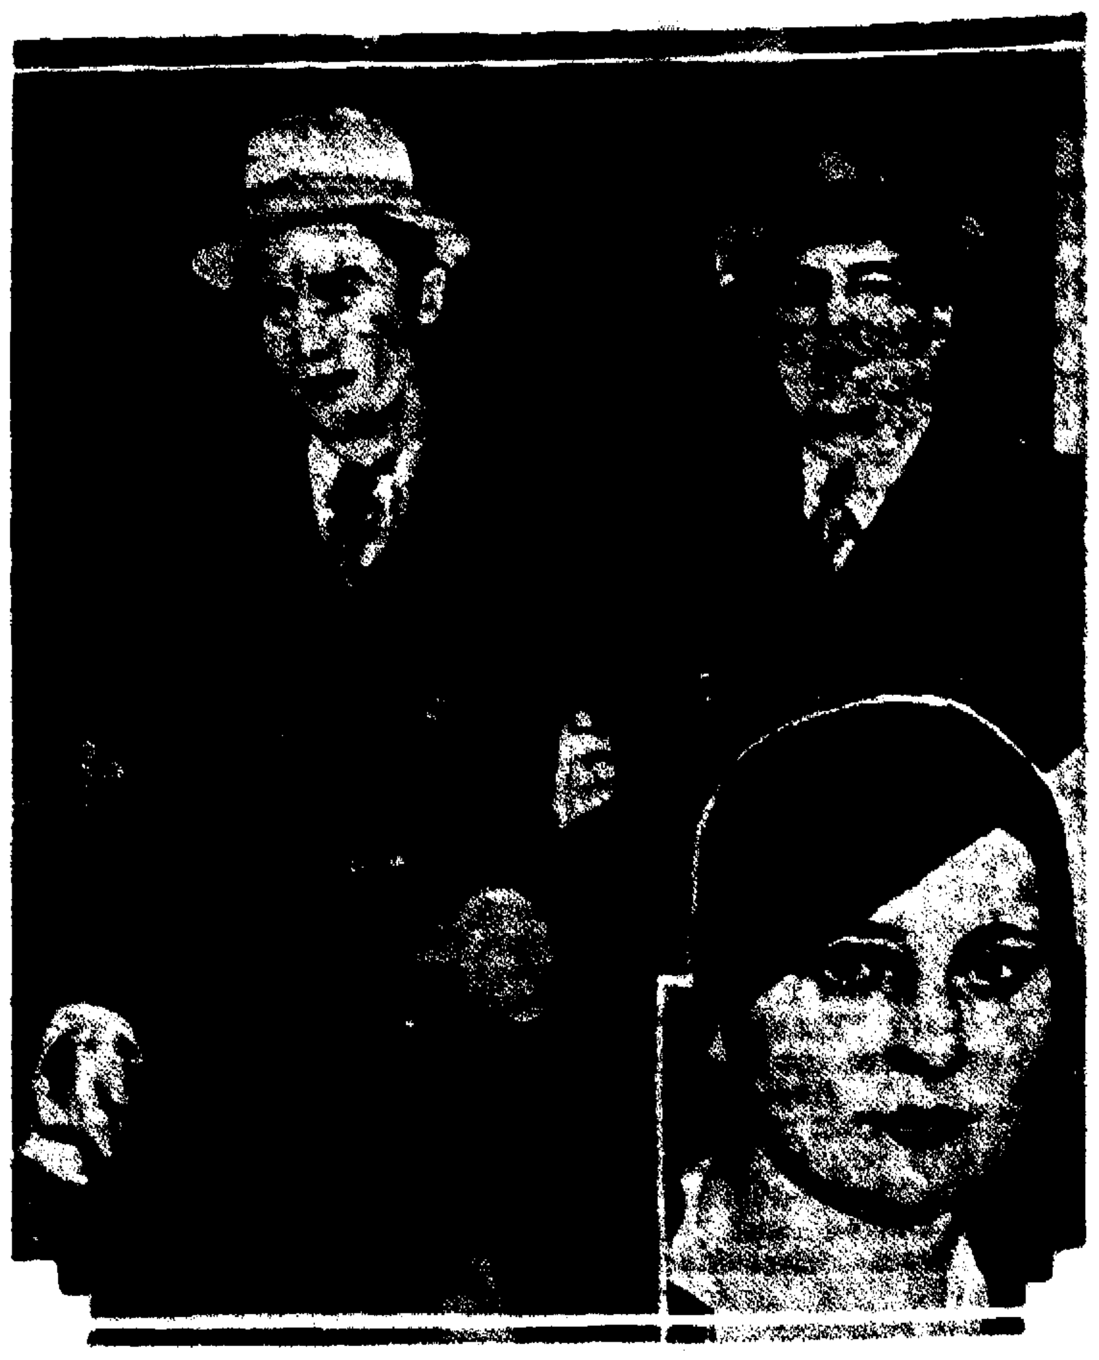
BAD MAN "GOT" IN GOTHAM



Showing unmistakable signs of the fight he put up resisting arrest, Joseph Filkonski, "bad man" of Cleveland, O., is shown in custody of a detective after his capture in New York. Filkonski, said to be Cleveland's "Public Enemy No. 1," is wanted on 35 charges, including two for murder. Inset is Mrs. Mary Kekoic, alias Mary Kraus, arrested after Filkonski's capture, said to have deserted her husband and two children to share the fortunes of the gorilla. Jewelry valued at $70,000 was found by police in the woman's apartment, as well as an arsenal of lethal weapons and ammunition.

"Heart of a Wife"

BY ADELE GARRISON

Madge Is Given a Private Hearing of the First Act of Mary's Comedy Drama, "Rescuing Roland"

NO matter how preoccupied Lillian is with her own concerns, she always is ready to give "first aid," physical, mental or spiritual, in any problem that confronts her friends.

I knew that the prospect of having the sealed and mysterious envelopes in Marion's lock box opened, before the time stipulated by old Mrs. Morton, was shaking her nerves. Yet she apparently had pigeonholed that matter, and her lips quirked with sardonic mirth as she asked me if she should "flag Dicky" if he betrayed any indication of coming up to the nursery.

"Oh, Please do!" I said panic-stricken at the idea of another interview with my husband while he was still in the jealous mood caused by his discovery that I had brought baby Faith downstairs for Hugh Grantland's inspection. "Tell him, tell him——"

"Leave it to me," she retorted. "Then you won't have anything on your conscience. I think"——she cocked a meditative eye at me——"that a threatened nervous collapse on the part of his mother, if she hears Faith cry, coupled with the information that you have just succeeded in getting the cherub to sleep, ought to do the trick.

"But don't you dare show your face out of this nursery suite until I give you the office that the Dicky bird is safely roosted in his own cage. I'll send you up a little note when that is accomplished. Aha and Oho!"

Lillian Leaves

She had been wandering around the room as she spoke. Now, standing in the door that led to the side upper veranda, she was looking out toward the bungalow.

"The wanderer is returning," she said. "Hugh is just driving into the bungalow. 'Leave us hope' that he is tired enough to sleep. By the way, why don't you snatch a few winks yourself? You'll hear the baby if she stirs an eyelash."

"I think I shall do just that," I replied mendaciously, for I knew that sleep at this juncture was impossible for me. "But—not until Dicky has gone to his room for a nap."

"I'll send him there if it's humanly possible," she said, "and let you know, anyway. So long."

She drifted out, and I tried to read and to sew, but I found myself unable to set my mind on anything until a low, scratching noise sounded on my door. I opened it to find Katie with the fingers of one hand melodramatically touching her lips and those of the other holding out a little note to me.

"The Coast All Clear"

As I took the note she scuttled away, still with her fingers pressing her lips, and I almost exploded into laughter as I realized how strenuously Lillian must have impressed the necessity for silence upon my voluble and shrill-voiced little maid!

"The coast all clear," the note read. "Think your spouse must be snoring his head off by this time. Ever thine, Mrs. Fix-It."

I tore the note up and stuffed the pieces in my waste basket. Then, feeling as if a load had been lifted from my back, for I was foolishly nervous about listening to another possible tirade from Dicky, I opened the door into the hall and sat down in the path of the cool breeze that it made possible.

I took up a book and was able to dip so deeply into it that I forgot all about Dicky, Hugh and indeed everything but that most intoxicating of all drugs to a reader—an interesting printed page.

Light footsteps advancing along the hall outside made me look up just as Mary paused at the door. With the training that the presence of a young baby gives in a household, she spoke in hushed tones, but her broad wink was eloquent.

"Listen to the broadcast!" she murmured. "I won't talk loud enough to wake the baby, but if you'll strain an ear you ought to hear something illuminating."

She went on down the hall to the room that she shared with Marion and Carolyn, and I heard her clear, trained voice perfectly.

"And you two call yourselves school athletes!" she said. "I suppose all the adoring little freshmen look up to you because you're on the teams. And here you've snored through five sets of tennis that I've been playing with Ronald.

"By the way, Marion, why didn't you tell me the boy friend was such a tennis shark? If I'd known it earlier in the season, we might have entered some tournaments. Ronald says we'd make a spiffy doubles team."

Just Things

Names

NAMES are funny things. Of course we would have to have some way of distinguishing members of a family or community for if we were all Bubs and Sisses we might all make a getaway when the summons came to appear on the carpet. But just what would your name be if someone else had not named you? Names, that is some of them, go by eras, just like the mackintosh, the fascinator, hoods, high top shoes and what else have you. Do you recall when you would have traded off your whole family if only your name might be Helen, Marie, Genevieve, Louise and you wondered what in the world the family could be thinking about when they gave you such a handle as Agnes, Gertrude or Mary. To be sure you changed your mind later and agreed that it was alright, in fact you didn't see where it might be improved on. And at that, you're in on a break for there are those who will always remember when Betty Jane was the vogue, the era of Barbara Ann and the post-war popularity of Joan and incidentally how old Ann is.

Mr. Sunshine

ABOUT the only thing that hasn't been hit or at least dented by the depression seems to be the weather. Even the Mr. Ripley must be a trifle surprised at it. And the best is yet to come if you ask those who have been taking the early morning air before his highness bestirs himself from his eastern bed, for from now on for the next few months we will be stepping out in broad daylight. Indeed even now, after months of arising in what seems to be the middle of the night, one questions the right-mindedness of the trusty arouser when a squint out of half an eye reveals blue, pinks, lavenders in the east, and it isn't the morning after either. According to those who check and double check on the rising and setting of Mr. Sun he put in an appearance at 7:09 a. m. today and bids us goodnight at 6 20 p. m.

Capitals

WE WONDER if the old practice of singing the states and their capitals and the multiplication tables wasn't just the forerunner of cheer leaders. There was a real thrill in being able to bolster up the courage of the rest of the class when it came to the weak spots, particularly around the capital of some of those doubtful states or chorusing loudly on nine times seven Yankee Doodle seemed to be a favorite tune for both and they really didn't sound so badly either. And if you have nothing else to do just try and figure out how many capitals of states you really do know.

Personal Mention

Dr and Mrs. O. M. Young and Joan Young of east Church street were recent visitors at Granville and Columbus.

Huddleston Article Disagrees with Beauty Treatment Views

I HAVE just finished reading a lengthy article which tells in great detail of the tortures of being beautiful! Being an accredited authority on this subject of female beauty and possessing at least the normal amount of feminine pride in my physical appearance, I indulge in beauty treatments as well as write of them. All of which leads up to this

Your Own Experience

I'm afraid that some of you may have read the same article, and so become timid about undergoing some of the commonly used beauty treatments which it attacks. I want to take exception to some of the statements made in that article—since I am able, like all reputable beauty experts, to determine which were correct and which were incorrect—so that you will know the truth.

In the removal of skin blemishes of any kind, by the electric devices made for that purpose or by surgery, unquestionably there is a good amount of risk, as well as pain. But these are the exceptional branches of beauty culture—not the every-day venture of the average woman in search of beauty.

For some reason permanent waving also brought forth a scourging denouncement. The paragraph devoted to it fairly made one blister! Isn't that ridiculous? Most of us have had permanents. In earlier days they were most uncomfortable, but today a permanent, outside of occupying several hours' time, isn't nearly as burdensome or taxing upon one's physical resources as a four-hour session of bridge, scrubbing the kitchen floor or pounding a typewriter on a busy morning.

Only the other day I changed the way of dressing my hair. The new method required four new permanent curls if the hair was to lie the way we wanted it to. The hair was cut, wound on the curlers, the heating machine rolled in, and within twenty minutes all was over without the slightest discomfort. Thousands of you have had the same experience.

A device for curling the eye lashes, featured for several years in various beauty columns, including my own, is listed among the "things women will endure for beauty." Yet it's a clever little contraption, easy to use, and never hurts the least bit and it does curl the lashes so beautifully!

Tongue scrapers, this article alleges, never were heard of until recently, supposedly being a development of "the new beauty craze." I recall a friend of mine, enlisted in the home forces of the Red Cross during the late World war, remarking on a group of Japanese men stricken with flu, who were assigned to her ward and who, regardless of their frightfully sick condition, used tongue scrapers as well as tooth brushes.

Competition Is Keen

Facials, referred to as irritating and painful, also came in for their share of scorn.

I suppose it's rather childish to let it upset me, but uninformed writers can cause so much damage that I feel obliged to try to offset any timidness such an article might have aroused in you.

Beauty treatments which are painful should not be indulged in. The catch is, however, that when properly given they are not painful or harmful. The corner beauty shop is interested in your patronage; therefore you will not be treated harshly there, for it is possible to obtain any treatment given in a beauty shop without rough handling, and competition is too keen for them to allow you to seek elsewhere for gentler methods.

Marjorie Heiser, Mary Thomas, Hubert Barnette and Wolford Coffey were guests of the All for Christ class of Greenwood Evangelical church when LaVelle Thomas entertained last night at her home on east Farming street.

"Anywhere With Jesus," the opening song, was followed by scripture by Helen Rice and prayer by the teacher, Perry Strine. In a short business meeting Donald Cramer was appointed a member of the lookout committee.

Contests in a social hour were won by LaVelle Thomas and Hubert Barnette. A meeting will be held March 25 with Waneta Stiverson of 592 east George street.

BERMUDA BOUND

by Corinne Reid Frazier

WHEN Ned Proposed a Honeymoon in Bermuda, Barbara Accepted the Trip, but Refused to Make It a Honeymoon—However, Life Became Rosy to Both of Them Under Southern Skies

THE Hero in This Story Was Old-Fashioned When It Came to Ideas of Marriage, So the Girl Finally Decided That Modern Methods Would Have to Be Sacrificed to Get Her Man

His eyes looked into laughing blue ones. "Barbara," he gasped; then scowled. "Did you come all the way to New York to have another laugh?"

"OF COURSE I'll go, Ned, darling." Barbara's eyes dreamed. "Bermuda and the West Indies. * * * It will be wonderful! But the marriage idea fails to appeal."

There was finality in her tone.

"So you're just mocking me?" Ned flushed. "'Yes, I will, but no, I won't,'" he mimicked bitterly. "That's the sort of answer you make to everything I say. When will you learn to take me seriously, Barbara? I'm proposing marriage—not a Roman holiday!"

"I understand, stupid—but you don't!" Barbara's voice sounded recklessly gay. "I said I would go. And I will."

"But—I—you * * *" stammered Ned.

"When do we sail?" Ned was exposed to the full battery of Barbara's dazzling smile. His head whirled as he gathered her close.

"Wait * * *" Barbara freed herself and looked at him reprovingly. "That," she said, "comes later—much later. If at all."

"Barbara, in heaven's name, stop tormenting me with your nonsense and tell me what you are driving at. I ask you to marry me—pronto; propose the very nicest honeymoon I can think of and you just make a joke of it."

"I am not joking at all," she said this patiently, as though she were talking to a slightly subnormal child. "And I accept your honeymoon offer with pleasure, nay, positive delight. But I don't care for marriages impromptu. We'll skip that course, if you please. If we are still in love at the end of the voyage, we can be married then. Plenty of time for that. Haste makes divorces."

"Naturally, you don't mean that as it sounds." Ned's voice was level.

"Well, I mean it, however it sounds." And Barbara tilted an exceedingly stubborn little chin. "Now, listen, Ned. Don't be archaic. You want to go to Bermuda, I take it, and so do I. Well, why not? The idea commends itself to me as one of the most brilliant the old bean has ever turned out. I can think of no more delightful companion in the world. In fact," wrinkling her forehead as though in thought, "I can think of no one else at the present speaking with whom I'd care to embark for Bermuda. You know, it has been a pet theory of mine for a long time that what's wrong with the world is not the much-deplored unconventionalism but too much conventional sham. So, that for convention!"

Barbara snapped an expressive finger.

"Why not be ourselves and do what we like? I've always wanted to go to Bermuda. You have kindly extended an invitation. What could be sweeter? Again, I ask, when do we sail?"

"Barbara Stone, you are the most exasperating person I have ever known!" Ned resisted an impulse to shake her. "I don't know what you really have in mind, but whatever it is, it's no go. Either you marry me as I have asked or we don't stir a step. That is, you don't—I have to," he finished miserably.

SILENCE, while Barbara blew rings of smoke into the still air with maddening unconcern.

"That's the dickens of it," Ned broke out afresh. "Here you sit, having a good time at my expense—and we have less than thirty-six hours in which to make up our minds—about marrying, I mean. I must catch that boat on the 19th, if we are to take this West Indies jaunt, too. It's business as well as pleasure for me, you see. Won't you talk sense, just this once?" He felt that he was humbling himself to plead like this, but it would be worth even that if he could make Barbara drop her everlasting teasing and tell him where he stood.

"But I was never more serious in my life, Ned." Barbara's tone had lost its banter. "I really mean what I have said. I'll go to Bermuda with you—in fact, I am going. The more I think of it the better I like the idea. But not as your wife. We'll be—just friends." She had the grace to color as she said it. "I, you see, I may think I'm in love with you now, and you seem to think you're that way about me, but are we really in love with each other, or with love?" She spoke in a serious, puzzled tone. "Do I know the real you, Ned? I don't want to marry unless I am reasonably sure I can be happy with the man I marry, and can make him happy. I want to know him through and through beforehand. They say that two-thirds of the divorces today are the result of people who are virtually strangers binding themselves together in extreme youth. Well, I'm against divorce. I hate it!" Ned knew what lay back of the intensity of feeling that trembled in her voice—her own father's and mother's broken life.

"I know of only one way to find out what a person really is," she went on. "And that is by spending some time under the same roof with him—or on the same boat. Now, on a trip to Bermuda, with, perhaps, the West Indies thrown in," her dimples flashed, "two persons might become very well acquainted, it seems to me. Don't you understand?"

"A sort of—trial marriage, you mean?" Ned spoke slowly, as though groping his way.

"Well, sort of, perhaps, only. * * *"

Ned interrupted impatiently.

"Barbara, do you think I would let you in for anything like that—caring for you as I do? What in the world are you thinking of? Certainly not your reputation!"

"Don't be sil, Ned, darling. Reputations are out of date. Why, I wouldn't know what to do with one if I had it." Barbara's drawl indicated that her serious mood had vanished. "Come, you old fogy, it's all settled now, so let's go in and dance." She dragged him from his seat in the conservatory and hustled him into the ballroom, ignoring blandly his set lips and muttered protest, four words of which she caught:

"* * * over my dead body * * *!"

On the way home, Ned asked Barbara once more to marry him. The following afternoon would be plenty of time, he pointed out. They could go to New York and get it over with before they had to take the boat. As her mother was in Reno and his traveling, it didn't matter whether they told the families until afterward. But the words died on his lips as the girl shook her head and he caught the old bantering note in her voice.

"I've told you how much of your proposition I would accept, young man," she said, "and that's my last word."

"Very well; then it's good-by, Babs, until I come back—if I do." Ned added the last, darkly, hoping * * *

"Good-by," said Barbara gravely, offering him a slim hand. "Until we meet again." Was she laughing at him? Ned cursed the darkness; used it as his excuse for not seeing the hand; turned on his heel and left.

* * * * * *

A CRISP breeze whipped through the morning mists that had threatened the day with dullness, scattering them helter skelter.

There was an air of bustling departure about the wharves. People hurrying toward gangplanks. Sailors running to and fro. Luggage trucks clattering along with their heavy burdens. Here and there a farewell tableau. The usual thing.

Ned Gladstone, trudging across the boards toward the Bermuda boat with steps that lagged, reflected bitterly upon the difference between this departure and the one he had imagined with Barbara on his arm. He shook off the thought, actually giving his arm a jerk as though to free it of the hand his mind had pictured resting there. So vivid was the impression of physical contact that he turned, startled.

His eyes looked into laughing blue ones. "Barbara!" he gasped. Then scowled. "What's the idea? Did you come all the way to New York to have another laugh? Or perhaps you would like me to call a minister, now? I always aim to please—any time—any place." His tone was sarcastic.

Barbara ignored the scowl and the sarcasm. "Isn't it nice that we happen to be sailing on the same boat?" she said conversationally, endeavoring to suit her steps to his long stride. He pulled away roughly.

"But, Ned, I told you I was going!"

He turned and grasped her by the shoulders, unmindful of the streams of people passing them. "Look here, Barbara, I'm not going to stand for any more of this. I don't want you now. Go back home where you belong!" And turning abruptly on his heel, he walked rapidly up the gangplank and disappeared.

Barbara suppressed something very much like a giggle, then rubbed her shoulder with an angry gesture, adjusted the collar of her trim little jacket and continued on her way alone.

"It's lucky this is New York and not Berryville," she soliloquized. "If one of our well-known town gossips could have seen that picture, there would be plenty of talk! I tried to make it apparent that we had met by chance and were accidentally going in the same direction as all good friends might do, on the very best of boats. But he just wouldn't have it that way. Oh, well, who cares—in Bermuda!"

FOR the first twelve hours of the trip Barbara studiously avoided Ned. At least she'd give him no chance to imagine she wanted to be with him after the things he had said. Her cheeks burned when she thought of the way he had treated her on the gangplank. She would make him whistle for her now!

But Ned didn't whistle.

At first, Barbara thought he was sulking because she had defied his "more mature judgment." It was perfectly sickening, the way Ned Gladstone lorded it over her just because he had happened into the world a few years before she did! One would think at times that he possessed the wisdom of Solomon, not to mention Methuselah's years, to hear him hand out advice!

But as the hours passed with no signs of Ned's resuming his perpetual pursuit to which she had become so accustomed in the last few months that she couldn't imagine life without him somewhere in the background, Barbara was forced to the conclusion that he was really outraged at her insistence upon going along; that she had lost him permanently.

She began to feel very sorry for herself! Here they were on the same boat for the sole purpose of learning all about each other—at least that had been her purpose—and Ned had paid no more attention to her than if she had been one of the white pillars supporting the gallery in the lounge. Less, in fact, for he often leaned against the pillars! She had worn her prettiest frocks and had flirted in her most devastating manner with several young eligibles on board through an insufferable luncheon and dinner in the hope of arousing either his interest or his jealousy. But there was no sign of the one or the other in his coldly polite attitude upon these occasions.

On the second night out, Barbara sat on deck by herself, watching the great round disc of the moon rise out of the sea. They were to dock at 11:30 the next morning—hardly sixteen hours left of her noble experiment, and she felt that she actually knew less of the real Ned now than she had before they left home. In fact, she was beginning to think that she knew him not at all. She hadn't dreamed that the Ned with whom she was acquainted could be so stupidly stubborn—or so fickle. The thought of his fickleness had been forced unpleasantly upon her this evening by his rapt attentions to a red-headed girl with whom he was having dinner, chaperoned by an equally red-headed mother. Being seated directly opposite this tableau, Barbara had suddenly lost her appetite and had slipped up here to be alone. She thought ruefully that she had been alone a good deal on this trip for a honeymooner—even one on trial.

She shut her eyes quickly to crowd back the angry tears. When she opened them again there was a gleam in the blue depths and her soft young mouth was drawn into a hard little line. A plan was forming in her mind, a rather wild one, perhaps, but still a plan. She would get a job in Bermuda. She simply would not go back to Berryville after this, where she and Ned had had such a good time. Although she could without comment, she thought; she had paved the way for that by telling her father she was going to New York to visit friends. But she would rather become independent, and then. * * * Her plan took no account at all of stubborn young men. Except in the vague thought of future revenge when she could marry some Southern gallant right under a certain person's nose. For Ned's business in Bermuda, she had learned before leaving home, was expected to develop into a permanent contract for him, with headquarters at Hamilton. Well, she would have some permanent business, too. She would show him that she could manage very well without him—for life as well as on a trial honeymoon.

Hot tears of self-pity welled up as she brooded over Ned's lack of understanding.

"Waiting for another adventure, I suppose?"

IT WAS Ned's voice. He dropped into the adjoining deck chair. Barbara made a motion as if to rise.

"Please, Barbara—just a moment. I'm sorry I said that. It was caddish. I'm jealous of these swains you have captured, I guess. I—I really want to talk to you." His hand detained her.

"We've only one more night of our—honeymoon—unless we go on to the West Indies." There was something in his voice that made Barbara vaguely uneasy. Something unlike Ned.

"I've been doing a lot of thinking, Babs. It was hard for me to get your point of view about all this. It would have been easy, coming from some other girl, perhaps, but, knowing you as well as I thought I knew you, it was a bit difficult." He was bending over her, trying to see her face. "I—Barbara, I simply can't stand it any longer, knowing you are here on the same boat with me, that you wanted——"

"Wanted what, Ned?" Barbara's words dropped like a cool splash of water in a still pool.

"Why, wanted to try out this—this trial marriage business. I've been fighting against the idea, but I don't care what any one thinks, if you don't. I want you any way you will come to me, Barbara—any way." He had her close now, raining kisses on her neck, her cheeks, her lips.

Gasping, she broke away.

"Ned, you——" Her voice shook. An inarticulate sound escaped her and she was gone before he could gather his long frame together to overtake her.

* * * * * * *

TEN o'clock. A lone figure sat hunched in a deck chair, staring into space. His only action was the repeated scratching of a match as he lit another of the innumerable cigarettes he had been tossing half-smoked into the starlit night.

Twelve o'clock. "What man could ever understand Barbara?"

Ned buried his white face in his hands.

"Ned, darling!"

Was that a whisper? Or a breeze. Even the breeze mocked him.

"Ned!"

"Barbara!"

She was in his arms. Sobbing. Then she hadn't been laughing after all.

"Oh, Ned, I didn't m-mean what you thought I meant about the honeymoon. I only wanted to try being together w-where we could see each other so much that if we weren't really in love we'd be j-just sick of each other before it was too late. Instead, I've scarcely seen you at all. B-but, I want you anyway, darling. I love you. I k-know now that we can't have anything in life that we aren't willing to risk something for. Anything worth while, I mean."

She drew away and looked up at him, eyes starry.

Superstition in the Lore of Precious Gems

FROM time immemorial peculiar characteristics have been attributed to precious stones. As there is a language of flowers, so there is also one of gems. Popular fancy, borne of superstition or romance, ascribes to every precious stone a power either for good or evil. History attests the fact that important events in the lives of celebrities appear to have been in many cases influenced and guided by the magic power which was supposed to emanate from some particular gem. Let's go back into history a bit and see how the lives of several prominent rulers were supposedly affected by gems.

King Solomon is credited with having possessed a ring in which spirits were imprisoned and who, at their master's command, performed the most marvelous acts. In olden times the monarchs of the East, with their fondness for display and pomp, decorated their horse trappings, their thrones and their persons with gems to which they attributed, as they do now, magical and talismanic powers. This belief has been and still is shared by many nations. In America many persons wear turquoises in the belief that they will keep them free from contagion. And the opal is suspected by many as being an omen of ill luck.

Here is a bit of German legend: Many believe the now exiled Kaiser fell because he failed to heed the traditional superstition of his ancestors. According to the story, every ruler of the House of Hohenzollern, when dying, handed a sealed package to his successor. This package contained a ring with a black stone setting of extraordinary luster. The stone was supposed to have been dropped on the bed of the wife of Elector John of Brandenberg immediately after the arrival of a son. The stone was carefully taken care of and the father of Frederick the Great had it set into a ring. This ring was worn by every Hohenzollern ruler until the last German Kaiser. He flaunted the superstition that surrounded the ring and refused to wear it. The ring has been placed in the Berlin Museum.

A Spanish opal of great beauty played a prominent part in the lives of several generations of rulers of Spain. The opal is set in filigreed gold and was a gift to Alfonso XII by a Countess who resented his action in discarding her after he was placed on the throne. She sent him the ring as a "wedding present." He gave it to his wife, Queen Mercedes. From that moment she began to ail and died a short time later. Alfonso then gave the ring to his grandmother and she died a few months later. One after another, members of the royal family of Spain who wore the ring came to a quick end, some through illness and others through tragedy.

Harding Beats Shelby, 26-17, in N.C.O. League Finale

PRESIDENTS FINISH IN RUNNER-UP POST OF FINAL STANDINGS

Whippets Soundly Laced in Rough and Tumble Court Conflict.

BY BOB KIRKPATRICK
Sports Editor, The Star

Harding High school closed its 1932 North Central Ohio league campaign last night by putting the skids under the Shelby Whippets in a rough and tumble encounter on the Shelby court. The Presidents turned back the Whippets to the tune of a 26-17 count.

The victory puts the Marion quintet in the runnerup position to the co-champions of the circuit, Ashland and Mansfield with six victories and four defeats against eight wins and two setbacks for the league title holders. Ashland cinched its share in the championship last night by smothering Galion under a 30-12 score.

The Harding-Shelby battle started out tamely enough as both teams took few chances and chose to work the ball in for close shorts rather than attempt long range tosses. The Presidents took a 3 0 lead before. Jim Miller hit the net for a pair of Shelby points. Harding held a 5-4 advantage as the first period ended.

Game Speeds Up

Both teams opened up a fast-moving offense in the second frame with Harding holding the upper hand in the hostilities most of the time. The Whippets gained a lead over the Bohyer-coached combine but once during the game, that a one-point margin mid-way in the second frame. The Presidents took a time out as Shelby forged into the lead and came back to regain an advantage which was never lost. The count stood 15-11 at the halfway point with the Presidents on top.

The first two periods of the game were what most fans would consider a fast and interesting battle, However, matched against the third and fourth periods, the first half provided about as much excitement as a Saturday afternoon quilting party. Hardly had the third period gotten under way when the fireworks broke loose. The entire second half could better be classified as a general roughhouse than as a basketball game.

Harding Holds Lead

The Presidents held an 18 to 16 lead as the third period closed. Shelby's attack bogged down in the second half and Harding was never given any real opposition, though the score stayed fairly close until the last frame.

Play grew rougher as the game moved into the fourth quarter but the Presidents continued to roll up points against the Whippets. Shelby was able to add but a single point to its total in the last eight minutes of play, this one coming on a free throw by Jim Miller. The Presidents added eight points to their total in the final frame. Jack Ling, Harding pivot man, left the game on personal fouls late in the fourth quarter. Bill Stark filled without causing a noticeable difference in the team's strength.

Coach Bohyer used a lineup against Shelby considerably different from any that has taken the court before this season. Ling started at center and Biecher and Vestal were at the forwards as usual. Junior Clay and Dick Morgan took the places of Pickerel and Lindsey at the guards. Clay turned in six points and Morgan led the scoring column with eight.

THE collegiate and scholastic basketball season is on its last legs Within another week there will be scarcely any games left to play aside from those in the various tournaments Independent teams will continue competition for some time but as far as the average fan is concerned, the season is completed.

Harding High school's team wrote finis to its regular schedule last night as it took the measure of the Shelby Whippets 22-17. The Presidents will compete in the central district class A tourney at Delaware starting next Friday and when the Presidents are eliminated there, the Red and Black suits will be packed in moth balls for another year.

• • •

Harding had a better season on the hardwood this year than has been the case for the last several years. A total of 10 victories were recorded against five defeats. One of the defeats was at the hands of the Shovel Y-Indus club, an independent Marion team and one generally rated just about the class of this section of Ohio. The Y-Indus was able to win by only a three-point margin and was forced the limit to do that.

• • •

It is rather early to start figuring the possibilities of a winning team next season but here is a list of some of the boys who, as members of the reserve squad this year, demonstrated promise of developing varsity material for next season. John Guthrie, John Vestal, Glenn Obenour, Francis Roush, all played a major share of the time with the reserves this season. Several other reserve players may blossom forth before another year rolls around. Only one reserve team member, Jay Howser, will not return next season.

Besides these reserve men, Harding coaches will have several of this season's varsity squad back again. Chief among these will be Bill Stark, center, Billie Hero and John Biecher, forwards.

• • •

The drawings for the Delaware district tournament have not been made as yet. Coaches of the schools who compete in the tourney will meet in the office of H. R. Townsend at Columbus Tuesday night for the drawings.

For the last two seasons Harding has met Columbus North in the opening game. Two years ago North won but last year the Presidents upset the dope and eliminated the Polar Bears, going on to lose to Columbus Central. It is hardly probable the luck of the draw will match the Presidents and Polar Bears again this year. If it does, Harding will be called on to play a team listed as one of the best in the district. The Delaware tournament looms as considerably tougher this year than it has been for several seasons.

DRUMM CHALKS UP ELEVENTH VICTORY

Blanchard "Doggie" Drumm hung up his eleventh victory in 12 starts last night in the Ohio Pocket billiards league by beating Bergandine of Plain City 125-86. The match was played at the recreation Billiards parlor.

Drumm turned in the highest run scored this season in the league against Bergandine, running 49 at one stretch. Bergandine's high run was 25.

Drumm will meet Shaw of Newark here Tuesday night. Shaw is the only man to defeat the local star in the 12 games. Ike Chase, former Marion man, will oppose Drumm at Columbus Wednesday night at the Clock billiard parlor.

HOGAN IS VICTIM OF FIRST INJURY

By The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 27—J. Francis Hogan, the largest and one of the liveliest of the New York Giants, is the team's first invalid of the training season, and he doesn't like the idea.

Hogan injured his left knee a couple of days ago in pursuit of a foul. It is badly swollen.

"Now," he groaned as he lay on his back, a pillow under the knee and an ice bag on top, "I'll have to get loosened up all over again.

KERR IN FAVOR OF GRID RULE CHANGES

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK, Feb. 27—Andy Kerr, Colgate football coach, has come out strongly in favor of the recent changes in the football rules and against coaches who have expressed disapproval of them.

Speaking at a Colgate alumni luncheon, Kerr said he did not believe the rules changes would greatly alter the game and predicted that officials would hesitate to enforce some of them because the penalties were "drastic."

"The rules committee," he said, "did a constructive piece of work in the effort to make this a better game.

HAFEY HOLDING OUT FOR BIGGER SALARY

By The Associated Press

BERKELEY, Calif, Feb. 27—Charles "Chic" Hafey, leading hitter of the National league last year and star outfielder of the St. Louis Cardinals, said today he will receive "a fair" increase in salary or he won't play ball, not with the Cardinals anyway.

"I figured they would raise me to around $15,000," Hafey said, "and also add on the $2,100 I lost for the month's absence last year. I'm going to stay right here until I get what I figure I'm entitled to."

He got $12,500 last year.

FINALISTS MEET IN HANDBALL TOURNEY

CLEVELAND, O., Feb. 27—The national handball singles and doubles championships were at stake today in the final round of the Y. M. C. A. tournament here.

In the doubles, the champion team of Atcheson and Walter Struli of Memphis, was matched against Lloyd Walker of Toledo and James Brown of Cleveland.

REFORMED WINS IN GAME WITH MORRAL

The First Reformed Sunday school basketball team scored a one-sided 36-17 victory last night over the Morral M. E. five in a game played on the Steam Shovel court. It was the second game of the evening for Morral, the Methodists having played in a Marion county church league game earlier in the evening.

Reformed had little difficulty in beating the county five. The regulars played in only two periods and allowed the losers but one point while they were in the game. Dale Schwaderer led the Reformed scoring with 12 points.

BOLEY ORDERED TO REPORT BY MARCH 10

By The Associated Press

FORT MYERS, Fla., Feb. 27—Shortstop Joe Boley whose sale to Cleveland on a try-him-and-buy-him basis was ruled no go by Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis, has been ordered to return to duty with the Athletics by March 10. In making the announcement Connie Mack said he never had been desirous of trading Boley.

"It seemed a shame for a player of Joe's years and ability to have to sit on a bench," Mack said, "when he might be playing regularly with some other club. It wasn't that I wanted to get rid of him."

Lucas Won't Take Cut.

By The Associated Press

TAMPA, Fla., Feb. 27—The continued absence of Red Lucas from the Cincinnati Reds' training camp here, appeared to be the only great concern today as batterymen continued their loosening up exercises. The pinch-hitting pitcher remained firm in his decision not to accept a reduction in salary.

ASHLAND GAINS TIE FOR LEAGUE CROWN WITH ONE-SIDED WIN

Galion Bows to High Powered Attack of Hilltoppers, 30-12.

Ashland High school cinched a half interest in the North Central Ohio league championship last night by trouncing the oft-beaten Galion Orangemen, 30-12 in a game played on the Galion court. The victory gives the Starnmen a record of eight victories and a pair of losses and puts them in a deadlock with Mansfield for the title.

Chuck Morrison and Tommy Thomas led the Ashlanders to the one-sided triumph over the Orangemen. Morrison parted the meshes for four baskets and Thomas rang up seven points on three buckets and a free throw. Nick Dolby contributed six points to the Ashland cause.

Galion held the co-champions to a single basket in the first period but the Hilltoppers broke loose in the second frame and ran the count to 12-2 by the time for the intermission. Galion came back strong again in the third period and played on even terms for one period, only to falter in the last frame and lose the game by a decisive score.

Delnore Goldsmith returned to the Galion lineup after a short absence but his presence did little in the way of stopping the title-bound Ashland quintet.

HARDING RESERVES END SPOTLESS SKED

Shelby Falls Before President Junior Varsity by 24-10 Score.

The Harding High school reserve basketball team completed a 10-game schedule against N. C. O. league competition last night by administering a sound lacing to the Shelby seconds, beating the Whippet Jay Vees 24-10. The victory gave Marion junior varsity combine a clean sweep for the 10-game schedule. The game last night had no bearing on the reserve championship, the Harding five having already cinched possession of the title by earlier victories.

Despite the fact that Harding walked all over Shelby, more than doubling the score on the Whippets, the Red and Black turned in its poorest exhibition of the season. Not until the final period of play did the team hit anything like its usual stride and then the play was not up to standard. The Whippet seconds offered little opposition to the Marion five.

John Guthrie topped the scoring column of the Harding seconds with seven tallies and was trailed by Maury Whitcum with five. Johnny Vestal, usual high scorer, was unable to locate the net with his usual degree of accuracy.

Lineups and summary:

VETERAN CHICAGO PUG GETS BEATING

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK, Feb. 27—Young Sammy Fuller of Boston, who once outpointed Tony Canzoneri in a non-title bout, has earned another chance at the world's lightweight champion, this time with the championship at stake.

Fuller won that right last night by handing Ray Miller, Chicago veteran, a decisive beating in ten rounds at Madison Square Garden.

Two Strikes on Kid Winter

Now here's the kind of post cards we like to see coming from the South—a reminder of that hackneyed but hopeful phrase, "It won't be long now." Bob O'Farrell, New York Giants catcher, is shown as he took his turn at bat, with Frank Hogan catching, in the first workout of the Spring training. The Giants are limbering up at Wrigley Field, Los Angeles. Already there seems to be the ghost of a whisper in the air, uttering the welcome "Play Ball!"

Pleasant Five Defeated by Green Camp Baptists

The Green Camp Baptists eliminated Pleasant Trinity Lutheran basketball team last night in the second round of the elimination tournament being staged among the six members of the Marion county Sunday school league. Green Camp will meet the Caledonia M. E. five next week in the finals of the tourney. Waldo Prospect and Morral were eliminated in the first round of play last week.

Morral and Prospect played a consolation game last night as a preliminary to the Green Camp-Pleasant fray, Morral staging a second half rally to down Prospect, 39-21.

Pleasant Trinity, with some new men in the lineup, put up a stiff battle against the Baptists, although trailing the winners all through the game. Earl Furniss and Merton Porter played a good game for the Baptists. Disterdick led the attack of the Pleasant. Furniss scored 18 points for Green Camp.

Cochran and Heller starred for the Morral team, Cochran with 12 points and Heller with 14 Keller led the Prospect team with 14 markers

The Morral-Prospect game was even until the second half when Morral suddenly launched a spirited drive that carried it out in front by a decisive margin.

STRIBLING COMEBACK BLASTED BY SCHAAF

Winner Crowds into Prominent Position in Heavyweight Picture.

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO, Feb. 27 Ernie Schaaf today was nudging elbows with the world's foremost heavyweight boxers, on the strength of a ten-round decision triumph over W. L. (Young) Stribling

Schaaf, rated as about the best outside the select group confined largely to Max Schmeling, the champion, and Jack Sharkey of Boston, demonstrated his right to challenge the best by decisively whipping a courageous Stribling

The victory moved Schaaf into the somewhat embarrassing position of crowding his co-manager, Sharkey for a place in the heavyweight sun, and did something toward hastening a battle between them. Before that, however, Schaaf probably will meet Mickey Walker, former welter and middleweight champion, here. March 18 was tentatively selected as the date.

Young and powerful, and with a 20½ pound pull in weight, Schaaf set his own pace, took everything Stribling had to offer in the early rounds, and from the end of the fourth clearly was master. Stribling was on top for a time. But in the closing seconds of the fourth, three crushing rights to the body and a sizzling left hook to the jaw dropped him dazed to the canvas. From there on he fought a superlatively courageous, but vain battle.

FONSECA CHECKS UP ON LAZY PITCHERS

By The Associated Press

MINERAL WELLS, Tex., Feb. 27—So that he can check up on his pitching candidates at a glance, Manager Lew Fonseca of the Chicago White Sox, has them wear blue uniforms during the training season

Pitchers have shown a tendency to dodge running laps around the field, and other unpleasant duty, and Fonseca figures to make them easy to watch by uniforming them in blue, in contrast to the white worn by the other hands.

APATHY MARKS STOCK SESSION

Turnover Today Recorded as One of Smallest Since August.

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK, Feb. 27—The stock market lapsed into apathy in the short session today, and while a little week-end liquidation appeared, the list as a whole was barely changed.

The turnover of some 400,000 shares was the smallest since last August, as several floor traders who have been providing the bulk of the trading recently failed to appear for the Saturday trading. The closing tone was barely steady.

Possible Influence

Whether the latest threats of congressional investigation of the bears had anything to do with the slump in trading was a subject of some discussion.

A few isolated soft spots cropped out. Auburn Auto had its morning drop, which has become almost habitual this week, sinking to a new low bottom for 1932, at 85, off 4½, then recovering partially. Santa Fe dropped 2 points on its January net operating income report showing a deficit of $128,901, then [illegible] a point. SLUMP HITS GRAIN PRICES

Foreign Downturns Exert Bearish Influence on Chicago Market.

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO, Feb. 27—Grains underwent price setbacks early today, influenced by prospective large tenders on March wheat contracts at Liverpool. Downturns in wheat values in Berlin were also a bear factor. Opening unchanged to ¼ lower, Chicago wheat futures declined all around later. Corn started ⅛@¼ off and continued to sag.

Wheat rallies from early downturns lifted the market to well above yesterday's finish. The rallies were associated with unfavorable crop reports from domestic winter wheat territory west and southwest. High temperatures for this time of year, together with dearth of moisture, were regarded as bullish, the abnormal conditions being likely to be intensified by windy weather in March.

One trade expert said complaints were increasing from Nebraska, Kansas and Oklahoma and that the crop condition percentage was low throughout a wide area. This situation, he said, could be repaid by timely rains, but with a persistence of adverse weather a major crop scare would probably develop. Opposite was word from Kansas City that elevator stocks of wheat there were at almost a peak record, and that many cars on track were waiting to be unloaded. Corn and oats appeared relatively weak owning to larger receipts of corn.

Provisions were firm, helped by steadiness of hog values.

FIRST OF 3 BRIDGES NEARING COMPLETION

Work Starts on Final New Bridge on Harding West of Here.

One of three bridges under construction on Harding highway between Marion and Meeker is nearing completion, another is in the process of construction, and work is being started on the third, County Surveyor Cecil R. Leavens announced this morning. The surveyor is resident engineer for the state highway department, which has contracted for the bridge work, and is in charge of engineering and inspection of the three projects.

Contractors Shumaker & Tennant of Martel are progressing rapidly with the first bridge west of Marion over Tymochtee creek. Another 30 days probably will see this bridge completed. The same contractors have virtually completed the second bridge west of this city, also across Tymochtee creek. When the backfill and approach have been finished, the bridge will be put in use.

Green & Sawyer, Lima contractors, have completed construction of a run around at the third bridge, crossing the Little Scioto river. The present structure is being torn away preparatory to excavations.

The new bridges embody 24-foot roadways, as compared with the 18-foot roadways on the structures they will replace. All three projects, a part of Governor White's statewide bridge building program to help employment conditions, will be completed within 90 days.

STORY BY JANE ABBOTT IS REAL LIFE DRAMA

"Wife or Mother" Problem Theme of Next Star Serial.

JANE ABBOTT

WHAT should a wife do when she discovers her husband's family is determined to break up their marriage? Should she resign herself to the inevitable or fight for her home? That is the problem in "Kitty Frew," a romance by Jane Abbott, starting in The Star in serial form Wednesday, March 2.

Kitty Brandon never realized the bitterness of the struggle to maintain class distinctions until she married Garfield Frew of a wealthy and snobbish family. Instead of being welcomed as a bride might expect, she found a frigid reception.

Kitty was torn between the unreasoning love of youth and a common sense realization that the odds were against her. What she decides is a thrilling, modern story, told by Jane Abbott with a deep understanding of the problem.

This is a story as real as life itself, a man-and-woman question that has destroyed many a romance before the honeymoon was over.

Mrs. Abbott is the author of about 20 novels, many of these being stories for girls. She is a native of Buffalo and spent most of her childhood vacations on the freight boats commanded by her father, Captain Marcus M. Drake.

She was married in 1902 to a young Buffalo lawyer and did not start writing until 1918. Her success was almost immediate.

After All, You Pay the Bills . .
Brick-making is our business. Naturally, we'd like to see every road in the country surfaced with brick. We admit we're prejudiced. ● But did you know that brick-surfaced roads last from 20 to 50 years and that other so-called modern pavements last from 3 to 15 years? That if you figure the cost per year of service, brick is always the cheapest? After all, you pay the bills . . . You have a right to full value for your tax dollars. Ask your city and county officials to pave with brick. We'll all benefit.
